NEWSPAPER, APRIL 7, 1947

These wartime pamphlets urging opposition to Hitler were put out by the German officers' Band--still a factor in the mystery of what happened to 2,000,000 missing Germans captured by the Soviets the story on the Volga city: The Führer... the marshal. "I will let you in on the secret. As soon as Stalingrad is captured, Turkey and Japan will attack the Soviets."

Where Are the POW's?

After four or five years in Russia and after exposure to Russian women, most of the German prisoners we took won't want to go back. They'll marry and settle down. Certainly we've got more Germans than 2,000,000, but we need them more than Germany does. Now the French say the Germans emigrate. We say: They went out to Russia in 1911-14. Let them stay emigrated."

A Soviet officer in Berlin last week gave this hard-boiled description of Russian prisoner-of-war policy. This week Secretary Marshall planned a busy and detailed challenge to the Soviet on the whole question of German prisoners. He was armed with a fresh intelligence report that estimated that the Russians had captured about 4,000,000 Germans. Minister Molotov had previously stated that 1,000,000 had been returned and 2,000,000 remained in Russia. That was about 2,000,000 unaccounted for. What were they and what were they doing? And did they possibly represent either a tool or a club for the Russians to wield in Germany?

Quick or Dead? A good many of the 2,000,000 may be dead. Russian communiques did not include a separate category for wounded prisoners. Thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, were counted as prisoners even if they had little chance of survival. The lack of hospital facilities, transportation bottlenecks, and the Russian notorious scorn for the "Fascist leeches" all would make things tough for a wounded prisoner. As late as July 1946 a trainload of healthy Wehrmacht officers, en route from Oranienburg concentration camp to the Caucasus, arrived with 11 per cent of 111,000 occupants dead and 60 per cent seriously ill.

Many of the missing 2,000,000 may have been deliberately misclassified as civilian workers instead of POW's. Germans in Russian camps were reported to have been offered the choice of staying in confinement or winning freedom and better rations by signing a contract to work as civilians for the reconstruction of Russia, the German labor to which the Russians believe they are entitled under the Yalta restoration pact.

In screening POW's the Russians rate them according to health, stamina, and skill, rather than rank. "Able and technically skilled" prisoners go into Category I; "able" into Category II. The lame, the halt, and the blind become Category III and IV, marked for early discharge. Of all the prisoners returned from Russia to the American zone, 20 per cent require immediate medical treatment. And meanwhile, the Soviets continue shipping prisoners out of Germany. In ten days of February 1948, the rail way can move railroad from German concentration camps (now being used as POW screening centers) to Russia.

Combined Staff: Russia's cavalier treatment of Wehrmacht prisoners is a serious political liability inside Germany. But by the same token, their return at a psychological moment could be an immense asset in a big-power struggle for influence in the Reich.

Their utility as instruments of future Russo-German collaboration could be greatly increased by the fact that channels for such collaboration already exist. They were created during the war, when expatriate German Communists and high-ranking Wehrmacht officers were formed into the Free Germany Committee. Under Field Marshal Friedrich Paulus and Gen. Walter von Seydlitz, who were captured at Stalingrad, Committee propagandized German soldiers to surrender en masse to the Germans. A subsidiary of the committee is the Band Deutscher Offiziere (Union German Officers), a transmission belt for the pro-Russian indoctrination of German officers.

Now Paulus and Seydlitz live together in a college near Moscow. Both are reported receiving no military training. A bright young Soviet Army officer, 3,000 other German officers, members of the Band, are in prisoner camps. They include about 60 generals among them the commander of the Feldherrnhalle division (four of whose officers will go on trial in Munich next week as leaders of a Nazi underground). Crick Luftwaffe officers, one of the former jet-pilot test pilots for Luft are reported training Soviet pilots. German, at Russian, teach air and tactics to the Poles. Together with students, these former German officers may constitute a German-Russian force capable of quick expansion.

About 100 Band officers have returned to Germany, ostensibly as demobilized civilians, but some actually wearing German uniforms. Paul Markgraf, a former friend of Paulus and Seydlitz, now chief of police in Berlin, and others in the administration of the Soviet zone. Even the gemstone soldier (prize when redeployed from a POW camp) Russia, can be useful. American intelligence officers say that hundreds of them returned to the western zones, act as forerunners for the Russians.

SUBJECT: USFR - American Army Personnel in Confinement

SUMMARY OF INFORMATION:

The following information was obtained from a former forced laborer who claimed to have been confined in an unregistered lager with Subject personnel. Informant claimed to have been released through an error committed by the commandant of the Moscow hospital where she was transferred because of infantile paralysis.

Approximately 60 km from Moscow, in the direction of Kalina, there is an unregistered labor camp. The confines, 150 men and 50 women, work in coal mines in the vicinity of the camp. Among those confined are 3 American Air Force soldiers who were captured by the German Wehrmacht, Czechoslovakia, during April 1945. The men are:

Charlie, 21 years, 170 cm, blond, blue eyes, has paralyzed right shoulder.

Joe, 25 years, 165 cm, dark blond, dark eyes, has stomach wound and is confined in lager infirmary.

Albert, 27 years, 170 cm, black hair, brown eyes, has stiff left hip and burn scar on left side of face, is from Texas.

The lager confines will never be repatriated and are not permitted to write letters.

SUBJECT: American Citizen Allegedly Held in USSR

There is quoted below the text of a letter, dated September 7, 1950 from the Assistant Chief of Staff, G-2, Tokyo, to the Assistant Chief of Staff, G-2, GSUSA, Washington, regarding an American citizen allegedly held in a prisoner-of-war camp in Karaganda:

"1. Interrogation of two Japanese repatriates from the USSR reveal the possibility that an American man was being held in Soviet forced labor camps as of 1948.

"2. One of the informants, who was repatriated 21 January 1950, reports having seen and talked with an American, name unknown, at the 99-13 PW camp in Karaganda between May and June 1948. The American was described as 25-26 years of age, 5'6" tall, weight 110 pounds, blonde hair, blue eyes, lean face. The repatriate "heard" that the American was an "ex-GI" who was captured in Europe near a large river (possibly the Elbe) after being lost from his unit during the last war. He was reportedly tried at Moscow and Karaganda by a military court on charges of espionage and received a 10-year sentence. According to the informant, the American spoke Russian fairly well and his German language ability was good.

Americans

"3. The second informant, repatriated 22 April 1950, reports that an American prisoner arrived at Karabas convict camp southwest of Karaganda about 22 August 1948. The American was quartered in the same room with the interrogator for three days. The informant states that the American was reportedly captured somewhere in Germany and sentenced to 25 years in prison on charges of espionage. He was described as 25 years of age, height 5'7", weight 160 pounds, medium build, large mouth, long face, reddish-brown hair, blue eyes, fluent in German and Russian. He was reportedly "treated by other prison inmates, who blamed the United States for their predicament. Informant states that the American was transferred to special quarters in the same camp in late August 1948.

"4. Attention is invited to similarities in the two reports at the present time; however, other repatriates from the same areas will be contacted as soon as possible on this special target. It is recommended that the European Command be queried on this subject and/or any pertinent data be forwarded for the information of this Command".

The above quoted letter was made available by Intelligence Division, European Command. That office recently made available a report, dated October 13, 1950 from 7707 European Command Intelligence Center, giving information from a European source, regarding an American allegedly held in a prison at Karanganda:

"1. The following information was extracted verbatim from MIS field report 7827/24 dated 13 February 1950, Fuessen Team Case No. 210, Classified Document Register BS-0695; PW source 256051; G-2 Hq US Con Log No. 1715, dated 24 February 1950. Date of information is March 1947 to November 1949. The MIS field report did not give any evaluation.

"2. Source states that he knows of one American who is interned in one of the camps in KARANGANDA (49°52'N - 73°10'E), KAZAKH SSR. Source bases his statement on the following: One day in October 1949, after he had returned from work, one of his fellow PWs in the barrack told him of an incident he had witnessed that day. On his way to work with his group, he was passing the vicinity of the airstrip when he saw Soviet militia and MVD soldiers start beating a man who had been walking in the area. The man cried out that he would not stand for that sort of treatment and that he was an American citizen. They then beat him and mistreated him all the more and called him a spy. A car of the MVD police arrived upon the scene, and the man was dragged into it and presumably taken to MVD headquarters. Source never saw the man again, nor did any of his comrades, but they heard that he had joined the other persons who were interned in the area."

"3. The MIS field report did not contain any indication that the information obtained from the source had been reported separately by MIS 7827/24."

"4. The MIS field report is now being processed for publication by 7707 ECIC."

Dear Mrs. Moore:

Reference is made to your letter of November 10, 1949 in which you referred to a number of American soldiers who are purportedly being held as prisoners in the "Iron Curtain" countries. It is presumed that the soldiers to whom you refer were allegedly taken prisoner during the second world war.

The terms of the agreement reached by the United States with the Soviet Government on February 11, 1945 at Yalta provided for the mutual repatriation of all American citizens liberated by the Soviet Armed Forces and of all Soviet citizens liberated by the American Armed Forces. On November 26, 1946 the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs informed the American Embassy in Moscow that, "according to information received by the Ministry from the appropriate Soviet authorities there are no American citizens in prisoner-of-war camps in the Soviet Union."

The Adjutant General Department of the Department of the Army, the organization concerned with Army personnel, has informed the Department of State that, according to its records, all of the American prisoners who were freed from prison camps and all of the American flyers who were forced to land in the Soviet Union have been recovered by the American military authorities. It was likewise asserted that no evidence exists as to the detention of American prisoners of war in the other "Iron Curtain" countries.

Since possibility SOV cooperation in implementing any GA RES on this matter is slight, principal purpose in bringing such problem forward wld be to inform world opinion and exert moral pressure. However, every effort wld be made assure that presentation this case wld be factual and restrained.

Case wld be presented under ARTs 10 and 11 of Charter as situation continuance of which impairs friendly relations between USSR and western-powers. Officers captured in North Korea by the Chinese Communists are now interned in a former army prison in Liaison. Detained men are confined in concentration camps in Pungwon (125-57, 12-13). The daily routine includes physical exercise, political training in Chinese and Russian, and analysis of the Korean war by Communist political directors. A specially printed paper is distributed daily. Personnel assigned to manage the camps have been greatly increased. Most of them are volunteers who were students in foreign language departments of the various Chinese universities.

This document concerns life in the Moscow prisons of LEFORTOVSKAYA, GULICHANSKI, and BOUTOVSKAYA. The subject of this document is mentioned in the following way: WALLINBERG: The Soviet authorities have no examples in holding as prisoners for years old diplomats, functionaries, officers, without any trial or judgment. Their purpose in this is to obtain as far as possible information, revelations, and denunciations. They also want to have a certain number of hostages on hand for eventual exchange of prisoners. Thus the Soviet authorities arrested, after their entry into Budapest, at the end of World War II, the Constable of the Swedish Legation, WALLINBERG, who was entrusted with the protection of the interests of several nations and owing to this fact was an object of many things. He had never acted against the Russians, but in their eyes he constituted an excellent source of information. He is still in some prison in Moscow, unless he is already dead. . . . At 6:00 p.m. on 11 April twenty-five American prisoners of war from Korea arrived in Canton by rail from Hankow. On 20 April they were being held in three foreign-style houses at the end of Tung Sun (Tung Sun) Road, with 50 armed police and some plain-clothes men to guard the area. These guards had two machineguns.

Source: [REDACTED] Don Long, [REDACTED] carried a story on 27 April saying that two groups of American prisoners of war were sent by rail from Hankow to Canton on 15 and 20 April. One of these groups was reported as more than twenty men and the other more than thirty, and all are lodged on Tung Sun Road, Chungshan. Source is being queried as to whether his report is a confirmation of the newspaper item.

The former Japanese shrine in Fuhien has been converted into an American "train camp." On one occasion the American prisoners of war were seen being delivered there by jeep. After the outbreak of war in Korea, Fuhien became overcrowded with wounded men who have crowded all local hospitals and available civilian houses. The local population has been advised by the government to leave. Fuhien has become a rendezvous of service men. Young men and students there are still enthusiastic about joining the army.

- On 23 April forty-five American prisoners of war arrived in Canton at 6:00 p.m. on two special cars of the Canton-Hankow Railroad. They were under guard of the garrison regiment of the Central and South China Military Area and were taken to private houses on Tung Sun Road, Tungshan, Canton, near the Kuangtung-Suangsi Baptist Hospital.
- On 30 April Chinese Communist authorities in Peking ordered that American prisoners of war, being detained at Tung Sun Road, East Canton, be taken to Kwailin. At 3:00 a.m. on 2 May two trains, accompanied by four armed cars, were conveying prisoners to the Tientsin Station.

Comment. SO-45715 states that 25 American prisoners of war were brought to Canton on 11 April. Newspaper stories in Hong Kong carried similar stories at about the same time. Though dates and numbers of prisoners vary, they all report the same place of detention.

- In early April American prisoners of war from Hanoi began arriving in Hankow, where they were turned over to the Chinese Communist Central and South China Military Command. By 15 April approximately 500 had arrived in Hankow, and on 18 April some of these prisoners were paraded through the streets of Hankow under heavy guard.
- In mid-April 60 prisoners of war, most of whom were Americans and the rest British, arrived in Canton via the Canton-Hankow railway. In early May they were being detained in a foreign-style compound at the corner of Tungsha Road, East, and Shichichow (SE 1/4) in Tungshan, Canton. There were barbed wire barricades around the compound, and a Public Security division mounted a heavy guard around the area. No one was allowed to enter without permission from high Communist authorities. The prisoners were treated fairly well, and were given good food and blankets.
- In mid-June 52 American prisoners of war from Hanoi were incarcerated in the Baptist church on Tungsha Road, Canton. These prisoners were sent to Canton because the Chinese Communist authorities hoped to obtain military and medical supplies from the United States Government in return for their release. They planned to demand U. S. $100,000 worth of supplies for each prisoner released. The British and Indian Governments were to be used as intermediaries.

- Comment. According to another informant, there was no indication, as of 24 May, that American prisoners of war were being sent to Canton. There were no barbed wire barricades at the end of Tungsha Road, East, Canton.

2. Comment. Casual informants have stated that as of 20 April 25 American prisoners of war who had arrived in Canton were being held in three foreign style houses at the end of Tungsan Road, East. See SO-63715 and SO-65066. SO-65066 reports that some of these prisoners were transferred to Beulin on 2 May.
3. Comment. According to some Chinese sources in Hong Kong, the presence of United States or United Nations troops in Canton as of mid-June cannot be confirmed. The original report appeared in the Hong Kong newspaper Wing Tse Jih Pao (like the Hong Kong Pinger Standard, a publication of 10 June 1950) in late April. The reporter probably based his information on the statement of a traveller from Canton, who stated he had seen prisoners in Tungsan. The Wing Tse Jih Pao would print any news embarrassing to the United States.

- One Republic of Korea soldier who was captured by the Communists on 29 October 1950 was sent to a war prison camp at Pyukong (125-26, 10-36) in North Pyong-ang. This camp in early November had about 1,000 American war prisoners, of whom about 700 were negroes, approximately 1,500 ROK prisoners, and about 350 ROK civilian employees of the United Nations forces. These men were classified by nationality and housed in barracks which accommodated about 70 men each. All prisoners were questioned and searched every three days but were otherwise left to themselves. Each man received a daily ration of 700 grams of millet, barley, or corn, in theory, but actually they received mostly corn and salt in about half the assigned quantities. Additional food could be obtained by bartering watches, uniforms, boots, and cigarettes. No blankets or bedding of any kind were supplied, but straw was available.
- ROK prisoners were released after a period of several months (the soldier reporting their facts was released on 30 December) and given the choice of joining the North Korean army, settling down as civilians in North Korea, or returning to their homes. Most of those released were first-year soldiers or civilians. They were issued certificates of release which could be presented on their way back home in order to obtain food from local residents. Villagers stated that food given to released soldiers was deducted from their ration in kind.
- The Chinese and North Korean Communist troops referred to the war prisoners as "liberated soldiers."
- Seven Americans were captured in Seoul on 6 January 1951 and were turned over to the Seoul head-quarters of the North Korean army. According to an officer of the North Korean State Security Bureau, they were scheduled to be sent to Pyongyang as soon as orders from general headquarters there arrived for their transfer. On 10 February, they were still in Seoul and were seen pulling handcarts from the West Gate toward the East Gate, under the supervision of three North Korean soldiers. All the Americans appeared undernourished and weak from hard labor.

During the Communist offensive against Seoul in early January, the Chinese Communist forces in the Yangju (27-42, 37-47) area captured about a hundred men and officers of the ROK army. The Chinese did not kill any of these prisoners but questioned each man separately. After this interrogation they released all the soldiers but kept officers, master sergeants, city residents, and high school graduates, who, it was rumored, would be sent to Manchuria for Communist indoctrination. The released soldiers were issued travel certificates permitting them to return home.

A staff member of the State Security Bureau in Seoul on 12 February stated that all American prisoners of war were sent to camps in Midden, Tongshan, and Antung Provinces of Manchuria, where they were put to hard labor in mines and factories.

The tours are to demonstrate to the Chinese people Communist political achievements and the success of the "volunteer" forces, as well as to encourage youths to join the army and aid in fund raising.
2. The arrival of the above prisoners in the South China area was coordinated with the Delegation for Comfort of Troops in Korea by Kiangtze Youth and the Delegation of Aid to Korea Volunteers.
3. In Canton some 40 UN prisoners participated in street demonstrations. Most were former residents of South China or Hong Kong and among the group were British and American officers and enlisted men selected for their knowledge of Cantonese dialect. Although detained in a local concentration camp, they have been allowed to write to friends and relatives in order to capitalize on their propaganda value. Demonstrations have also been planned.

- In November 1951 about 50 American prisoners of war were brought under guard from Shanghai to Hangchow, and were then taken to Moehiafou (Moehiafou) and placed in the detention center there. On 10 February 1952, 15 of them were taken elsewhere, leaving only 35.
- The Chinese Communist Party Committee for West China and the Political Department of the 3 Field Army each sent a cadre to the Moehiafou Detention Center to serve as the highest responsible officers there. In addition, the Propaganda and Organization Departments of the Chongqing Party Committee each sent five cadres to be responsible for the management and education of the prisoners.
- LIT Ping-to (李平托), Propaganda Department Director, and YANG Sen-i (杨森一), Organization Department Director, both of the Chongqing Party Committee, and KU Te-tsun (顾德尊), Propaganda Department Director of the Hangchow Party Committee, visited this detention center in December 1951 and in January 1952.
- This detention center is guarded by a company of the 7 Army Group.
 - Comment. The exact location of Moehiafou is unknown, but it is probably near Hangchow.
 - Comment. KU Te-tsun may be the same as the man by that name who has been listed as the Propaganda Department Director of the Chongqing Provincial Government.
 - Comment. At these times the living conditions of the prisoners were fair.

War Prisoner Administrative Office and Camp Classification

- In May 1952 the War Prisoner Administrative Office (Chon Pu Kwan Li Ch'u) (2069/0199/4619/3810/5710) in Pyongyang, under Colonel So-mun-ch'i-fu (6179/7024/1146/1133), as intelligence officer attached to the general headquarters of the Soviet Far Eastern Military District, controlled prisoner of war camps in Manchuria and North Korea. The office, formerly in Mukden, employed 30 persons, several of whom were English-speaking Soviets. LII Hui (2651/6701) and HAN II (0589/2400) were deputy chairmen of the office.
- The office had developed three types of prisoner-of-war camps. Camps termed "peace camps," detaining persons who exhibited pro-Communist leanings, were characterized by considerate treatment of the prisoners and the staging within the camps of Communist rallies and meetings. The largest peace camp, which held two thousand prisoners, was at Chungghim. Peace camps were also at K'aiyuan Kwan (126-05, 42-36) and Poonch'i (123-13, 41-80).
- Reform camps, all of which were in Manchuria, detained anti-Communist prisoners possessing certain technical skills. Emphasis at these camps was on - Normal prisoner-of-war camps, all of which were in North Korea, detained prisoners whom the Communists will exchange. Prisoners in the peace and reform camps will not be exchanged.

- Officials of North Korean prisoner of war camps sent reports on individual prisoners to the War Prisoner Administrative Office. Cooperative prisoners were being transferred to peace camps. ROK army officers were being shot; ROK army soldiers were being indoctrinated and assimilated into the North Korean army.

Kangdong Camp

- In May the largest North Korean prisoner of war camp, detaining twelve hundred prisoners, was near F'al King (1132/1345) mountain, six miles southeast of the Kangdong (126-05, 39-09) (NU-437) railroad station.¹ The compound, divided with barbed wire and mud embankments into four partitions for Americans, English, and Turkish prisoners and prisoners of other nationalities, held 840 Americans, 100 English, 60 Turkish, and 200 hundred French, Dutch, and Canadian troops. Most of the United States prisoners were members of the 1 Cavalry Division and the 24 Infantry Division. General William Dean was moved from Berlin and hidden in this camp in 1951.

- The Kangdong camp, organized into study, management, sanitation, and fitness sections, compelled the prisoners to study for three hours, to labor for four hours, and to discuss political problems for two hours.

- On 1 May nine thousand (nin) ROK army prisoners and fifty United Nations prisoners were in caves at the Kangdong camp, extending from approximately NU-42363 to NU-44368 in a valley at A'al-ai, Kiangdong-syn (126-05, 39-09) (NU-437).² Of the ROK army prisoners 10 percent were officers, 50 percent non-commissioned officers, and 40 percent privates. Of the United Nations prisoners 10 percent were Negroes. The prisoners, who received 600 grams of cereal and salt each day, were not required to work and spent only two hours each day out of the caves. An average of two prisoners were dying daily from malnutrition and eruptive typhus. The majority of prisoners at this camp were extremely anti-Communist in thinking. Three North Korean army guards, armed with PPK's and rifles, were at the entrance of each cave.

Camp Number 106, Miria

- On 1 May approximately sixteen hundred ROK army prisoners of war, including one hundred officers and five hundred non-commissioned officers, were at the North Korean prisoner of war camp Number 106 at approximately TD-47221A, 1.6 kilometers southwest of the Miria railroad station (125-51, 39-01) (TD-4722). Prisoners held here, having been processed through five ideological screenings, were believed to be potential converts to Communism. The prisoners believed that they were to be assimilated into the North Korean army. Members of political and security detachments maintained strict surveillance of the prisoners. The surveillance often was carried out by members of these bureaus who entered the camps disguised as prisoners.

- Each prisoner received 50 won monthly, 1 kilogram of grain and 45 grams of soy bean oil, vegetables, salt, and soy bean paste daily. The prisoners were wearing North Korean army uniforms. The prisoners were constructing air raid shelters near the Miria airfield ten hours each day. Two hours of indoctrination lectures were also held daily. The prisoners had been organized into squads of ten men. Each of the camp's four battalions had three platoons and each platoon, four squads. A guard platoon, armed with M-1's, machine, and PPK's, was at the camp.

J.R.

11. On 5 May 200 ROK army prisoners and 110 prisoners from other United Nations armies including 80 Negroes, were at the North Korean prisoner of war camp at the site of the former Suan mine (286-23, 38-47) (N2-1396), ten kilometers north of Suan (286-27, 38-40) (N2-7186). Lieutenant Colonel KIM Kye-soon (6955/1114/1360) commanded the camp. Although other United Nations prisoners were not required to work, the ROK army prisoners constructed shelters and trenches throughout the entire day. The prisoners received only rice balls for food. Several of the other United Nations prisoners had obtained wheat paste from villagers in exchange for watches and other personal possessions. The villagers were prohibited from entering the camp area. No sanitary facilities were offered to the prisoners. Approximately fifteen prisoners, including both ROK and United Nations personnel, were too ill to stand.

Sarikon

12. In late April approximately eight hundred United Nations prisoners were in a series of underground shelters at approximately IC-1667 in a valley between two hills four kilometers northeast of the Sarikon railroad station (285-46, 38-30) (N2-1064). On each side of the valley at the base of the two hills were 27 shelters. One shelter in every five accommodated the camp guards. Right hundred Chinese Communist soldiers, armed with PMA's and rifles, guarded the area. Dummy guards were also used at night. The majority of the guards were billeted in a nearby village of fifteen homes. The guard billets were easily visible from the air. Each prisoner received pork soup and 600 grams of cereal three times daily and a package of cigarettes each day. The prisoners were required to work for one hour and attend indoctrination meetings for two hours daily.

Mukden

13. On 6 January 1952 four hundred United States prisoners, including three hundred Negroes, were being detained in two buildings at Kaiao Han Kuan Chieh, at the southeast corner of the intersection, in Mukden. One building, used as the police headquarters in Kaiao Han Kuan during the Japanese occupation, was a two-story concrete structure, 30 meters long and 20 meters wide. The other building, one story high and constructed of gray brick, was behind the two-story building. Both buildings had tile roofs. All prisoners held here, with the exception of three second lieutenants, were enlisted personnel. The prisoners, dressed in Chinese Communist army uniforms, with a red arm band on the left arm, were not required to work. Two hours of indoctrination were conducted daily by staff members of the Northeast Army Command. Prisoners were permitted to play basketball in the courtyard. The attempt of three white prisoners to escape caused the withdrawal of permission for white prisoners to walk alone through streets in the vicinity of the camp. Two Chinese Communist soldiers guarded groups of white prisoners when such groups left the buildings. Negroes, however, could move outside the compound area freely and individually. Rice, noodles, and one vegetable were served daily to the prisoners in groups of 10 to 15 men. One platoon of Chinese Communist soldiers guarded the compound.

1. Comment. In late February 1952 two thousand prisoners, slightly inclined toward Communism, were being detained at the base of a mountain three kilometers west of Langkang.

2. Comment. This is presumably information on the same camp as that reported in paragraph 6-7 above.

In late May 1953, approximately 1,500 United Nations prisoners of war were confined in a camp at Langkang (2639/1444/2321), Manchuria. The majority of these prisoners of war were American Marine officers and men who were sent to this camp after recovering from wounds.

Comment. A POW camp also tentatively accepted in Manchuria was dropped from available listings in January 1953 because of a lack of recent reports concerning it. Available information fails to indicate the positive presence of any POW camps in China outside of Manchuria.

Distribution of Prisoners of War

28 December 1951

1. You will recall that in October we developed and sent to the Secretary of State, Secretary of Defense, and Director of the Joint Staff a staff study on the question of repatriation of prisoners of war.

2. There can be no doubt that the forcible repatriation of prisoners of war in Korea would have serious effects upon U.S. psychological warfare operations for many years to come.

3. Our treatment of Soviet and satellite captives has an unfortunate history, as you will recall. As a result of an agreement at Yalta, the United States in the years immediately after World War II assisted the Soviet Union in the repatriation of various categories of Soviet bloc persons—chiefly prisoners of war, escaped, and displaced persons. The result of our cooperation was that more than four million Soviet citizens were returned to the Soviet Union and that thousands were executed or punished in other ways without regard to the conditions which caused their displacement from Soviet-controlled territory.

4. In addition, persons escaping from the Soviet area after World War II were forcibly returned to Soviet control as a matter of U.S. policy up until well into 1948. This treatment of Soviet captives became well known to the populations within the Soviet area and, as has been well documented, became the cause of widespread despair. It practically stopped the flow of defections, and it would make it very difficult to wage effective psychological warfare against the Red Army in event of war.

5. Our policy was subsequently changed so that persons entering the Allied zone of Germany and Austria are no longer forcibly returned. The treatment we have given defectors has, however, not been sufficiently good or well publicized to erase the former picture.

6. This is the background within which the question of forcible repatriation of Chinese and North Korean prisoners of war must be considered. Repatriation of our Korean victims would distinguish us from Communist forces in any future conflict. It would therefore in the long run cost us more American lives than the lives of the prisoners of war problem.

7. The latest JCS directive to General MacArthur on the subject indicates that we are making an effort to exchange prisoners on a voluntary basis. (We are not giving publicity to this fact, probably because we are not yet ready to make the final decision). The instructions to General MacArthur require that should he be compelled to examine the desirability of forcible repatriation, he must refer the matter for decision to Washington.

10. I have learned by hearsay that the President is informed on this question and is inclined to oppose forcible repatriation.

11. Recognizing that there are factors to consider in making a decision on this question other than the psychological, I believe nevertheless that the great importance of the psychological factor should be emphasized at the time when a decision is about to be reached. I recommend that you discuss this problem with the Board members and consider also discussing it with the President.

Please let me have as prompt a reply as possible, returning the enclosure, in order that I can inform the writer.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

FR/NA - Mr. Drew

DATE, January 4, 1953

FROM - Mr. Walter J. S. Sessel, Jr.

SUBJECT: Article in December 18, 1953 issue of U.S. News and World Report re Americans held by Communists.

The attached letter dated December 21, 1953 from Senator Lyndon B. Johnson is referred to NA for handling since the enclosure apparently refers to an article concerning missing Korean War GI's and not to American soldiers in Soviet custody, as the writer alleges. The writer is apparently referring to the article on page 27 of the December 18th issue of U.S. News and World Report entitled "Where are 944 Missing GI's?". NA has been unable to find an article referring to six or eight hundred American soldiers in Soviet custody.

It is suggested that the following be included in the letter which NA drafts in reply to Senator Johnson:

The Department of State has no information to the effect that there are approximately six or eight hundred American soldiers in the custody of the Soviet Government. A few of the prisoners-of-war of other nationalities recently released by the Soviet Government have made reports alleging that American citizens are imprisoned in the Soviet Union. All of these reports are being investigated by this Department with the cooperation of other agencies of the Government.

You are probably aware that representations which the United States Government recently made to the Soviet Government resulted in the release in Berlin on December 29 of Homer H. Cox and Leland Towers, two Americans reported by returning prisoners-of-war as being in Soviet custody. The Department will investigate, as it has done in the past, every report indicating that American citizens are held in the custody of foreign governments.

Senator Johnson's letter has been acknowledged by telephone. Please return to the library the attached copy of U.S. News and World Report.

My dear Senator Johnson:

I refer to your letter of December 21, acknowledged by telephone on December 30, with which you enclose a letter from Mr. Paul Bath of Marshall, Texas concerning an article in the December 18 issue of U.S. News and World Report. It is believed that Mr. Bath refers to the article "Where are 944 Missing GI's" on page 27 of this publication. I believe that the following account of the efforts being made to obtain the release of all our men in Communist custody will be of interest to your constituent.

On September 9, the United Nations Command presented to the Communist representatives on the Military Armistice Commission a list of approximately 3,404 Allied personnel, including 944 Americans, about whom there was evidence that they had at one time or another been in Communist custody. The kinds of evidence from which this list was drawn included letters written home by prisoners, prisoner of war interrogations, interrogations of returnees, and Communist radio broadcasts. The United Nations Command asked the Communist side for a complete accounting of these personnel.

On September 21, the Communists made a reply relative to the list of names presented to them by the United Nations Command on September 9, in which they stated that many of the men on the list had never been captured at all, while others had already been repatriated. The Communists at the same time asked for an accounting of 98,742 prisoners they alleged had not been accounted for by the United Nations Command.

General Clark, in a letter of September 24 to the Communist side, stated that he considered their reply wholly unacceptable, and pointed out that by signing the armistice agreement, the Communists had undertaken a solemn obligation to repatriate directly or to hand over to the custody of the Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission all of the captured persons held by them at the time the armistice was signed. He pointed out that this obligation was binding upon them and applied to all United Nations Command persons regardless of where captured or held in custody. I am enclosing a copy of General Clark's letter of September 24 which you may wish to send to your constituent.

On November 21, the United Nations Command provided the Communist side with a revision of its original list of unaccounted for Allied personnel which it had presented to the Communists on September 9. The revised list contained a total of 3,400 names, and the figure for United States prisoners of war unaccounted for was increased by eight to a total of 652.

On November 21, the United Nations Command protested in the Military Armistice Commission to the Communists that they had still failed to give a satisfactory reply concerning the list of unaccounted for United Nations Command personnel, and pointed out that additional evidence provided by three Korean prisoners of war who recently defected to the United Nations side corroborated the United Nations Command statements that the Communists were withholding prisoners of war. The United Nations Command demanded that the Communists hand over to the custody of the Custodian Forces of India all those prisoners that your side still retains.

Ambassador Arthur Dean has also referred to this problem in the course of his negotiations with the Communists at Panmunjom.

Your constituent may be assured that it continues to be our determined purpose to obtain the return of all personnel in Communist custody, and the United Nations Command will make every effort to accomplish this objective.

My dear Senator Saltonstall:

Secretary Dulles has asked me to reply to your communication of February 13, acknowledged by telephone on February 23, enclosing a letter from Mrs. Ruth King of Windsor, Massachusetts. Mrs. King writes concerning an article in "U.S. News and World Report" regarding American civilians and military personnel who may be in Communist custody.

The Department does not overlook any reports that American citizens abroad are in difficulties of any kind. In each case it makes a careful investigation into the circumstances in order to determine what action can and should be taken. We share your constituent's concern for those Americans who may be imprisoned in Communist countries, and for those individuals with legitimate claims to American citizenship who, while not actually imprisoned, are not permitted to leave the countries in which they presently reside.

It should be pointed out however, that most of the possible American citizens in Eastern Europe are dual nationals whose claims to American citizenship are in many cases not recognized by the governments of the countries in which they are now residing.

For the most part these persons are (a) naturalized Americans who returned to the country of their birth, (b) children born in the USSR or other Iron Curtain countries of naturalized American parents, who derive a claim to American citizenship from the fact that they are the children of American citizens who may be able to make a claim.

Mrs. King's letter is being requested.
Sincerely yours,

Thurston B. Norton

A recently arrived Greek refugee from Manchuria has reported seeing several hundred Russian prisoners of war being transferred from Chinese trains to Russian trains at Mandchouli near the border of Manchuria and Siberia. The POWs were seen late in 1951 and in the spring of 1952 by the informant and a Russian friend of his. The informant was interrogated on two occasions by the Assistant Air Liaison Officer and the Consul General agreed with his evaluation of the information as probably true and the source as of unknown reliability. The full text of the Initial Air Liaison Office report follows:

First report dated March 16, 1954, from Air Liaison Office, Hong Kong, to USAF, Washington. C2.

"This office has interviewed refugee source who states that he observed hundreds of prisoners of war in American uniforms being sent into Siberia in late 1951 and 1952. Observations were made at Manchouli (Lupin), 49°50'-11.09"N Manchuria road map; AMSL 201. First Edition, on USSR-Manchurian border. Source observes POWs on railway station platform loading into trains for movement into Siberia. In railway restaurant source observed three POWs who were under guard who were conversing in English. Poles were wearing insignia which indicated POWs were Air Force. Uncommissioned officers. Source states that there were a great number of Germans among POWs captured and also stated that at no time later were any POWs observed returning from Siberia. Source does not wish to be identified for fear of reprisals against friends in Manchuria, however is willing to cooperate in answering further questions and will be available Hong Kong, for questioning for the next four days."

Upon receipt of this information, USAF, Washington, requested elaboration of the following points:

1. Description of uniforms or clothing worn by POWs including ornaments.
2. Physical condition of POWs.

7. Complete description of three POWs specifically mentioned.

The Air Liaison Office complied by submitting the telegram quoted below.

*FROM: USAINFO SON LACKY. CITE C 4. REUR 53737 following answers submitted to seven questions.

- (1) POWs wore OD outer clothing described as not heavy insulation at weather considered early spring. Source identified from pictures service jacket, field, M94, etc belongings except canteen.
- (2) Condition appeared good, no wounded all ambulatory.
- (3) Station divided into two sections with tracks on each side of loading platform. On Chinese side POWs accompanied by Chinese guards. POWs passed through gate unloading platform to Russian train manned and operated by Russians. Russian trainmen wore dark blue or black tunic with silver colored shoulder boards. Source says this regular train uniform, but he knows the trainmen are military and wearing regular train uniforms.
- (4) Interrogation with aid of more fluent interpreter reveals source first observed POWs in railroad station in spring 1951. Second observation was outside city of Manchouli about three months later with POW train headed towards station where he observed POW transfer. Source was impressed with second observation because of large number of Negroes among POWs. Source states that he was told by a very close Russian friend whose job was numbering railroad cars at Manchouli that the subsequent POW shipments passed through Manchouli. Source says these shipments were reported to be made occurred when United Nations forces in Korea were on the offensive.
- (5) Unknown.
- (6) Only Russian accompanying POWs were those who married Chinese.

(7) Three POWs observed in station restaurant appeared to be 30 to 35. Source identified Air Force non-commissioned officer sleeve insignia of Staff Sergeant rank, stated that several inches above insignia there was a propeller but says that all three did not have propeller. Three POWs accompanied by Chinese guard. POWs appeared thin but in good health and spirits, were being given what source described as good food. POWs were talking in English but did not converse with guard. Further information as to number of POWs observed source states that first observation filled a given passenger car train and second observation about the same. Source continues to emphasize the number of Negro troops, which evidently impressed him because he had seen so few Negroes before. Source further states that his Russian railroad worker friend was attempting to obtain a visa to Canada and that he could furnish more information, the railroad workers name is Leon Strelnikov whose mothers sister lives in Canada and is applying for a visa for Strelnikov (phonetic). Comment Reporting Officer: Source is very careful not to exaggerate information and is positive of identification of American POWs. In view of information contained in Charity Interrogation Report No. 619 dated 5 February 54, Reporting Officer gives above information rating of F-2. Source departing Hong Kong today by ship. Future address on file this office."

No. 947

The Embassy of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and has the honor to request the Ministry's assistance in the following matter.

The United States Government has recently received reports which support earlier indications that American prisoners of war who had seen action in Korea have been transported to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and that they are now in Soviet custody. The United States Government desires to receive urgently all information available to the Soviet Government concerning these American personnel and to arrange their repatriation at the earliest possible time.

THE NEW YORK TIMES
THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1954SOVIET DENIES HAVING
U.S. KOREA PRISONERS

MOSCOW, Thursday, May 11.—The Soviet Government in a note sent to the United States Embassy yesterday denied that American prisoners had been transported to the Soviet Union from Korea.

The Soviet Government's statement was the first published notice that the United States had sent a note to Moscow on this subject. The number of prisoners reported and where they were sent remained.

The acknowledgment was published in Soviet newspapers today, and the United States made the charge in a note delivered to the Soviet Foreign Ministry on May 8.

The Soviet reply said: "The statements in the note of the United States Government, that American war prisoners, participants in military action in Korea, have been transferred to the Soviet Union and are at the present time maintained under Soviet guard are without any basis and are clearly refuted, as there are not and have not been any such persons in the Soviet Union."

The Moscow radio heard in London broadcast this acknowledgment. The Associated Press said.

At the State Department in Washington, a spokesman said the United States Embassy in Moscow gave the Soviet Foreign Office a note May 1, but the spokesman said he did not know when the prisoners were or how many there were. He said it was not the note also had been sent to the Soviet Embassy a week ago.

THE OTHER PRISONERS

While world attention has been focused on the Korean war prisoners comparatively little has been said about many other prisoners from many nations who languish in Communist jails or are being worked to death in Communist slave labor camps. Their plight has been brought into the news again by the appearance of the two Americans, Roger Cox and Leland Taylor, who have just been freed by the Soviets and of Arnold M. Klien, the American business man released from a Shanghai prison suffering from partial paralysis and beriberi.

All three confirm that the Soviet bloc and the Chinese Communists are holding in their jails and slave camps many foreigners, including soldiers and civilians, women and children. Cox and Taylor, who were freed because they had been identified, by returning Austrian prisoners, have identified at least four more Americans and reported on six others. But, according to State Department figures, the total number of Americans held by the Soviets and their European satellites exceeds 1,000 in addition to several times that number who are reported claimants to American citizenship, and the Chinese Communists are known to hold about 100 Americans. The latter figure may be increased by these unidentified prisoners of the Korean war reportedly deported to China.

Many of these Americans, like many West Europeans, were residents in the Iron Curtain countries caught by the Communist tide; others were deported from German concentration camps; some, like Cox, were simply kidnapped. How many have since died is uncertain, but the known death toll among German and Japanese war prisoners tells its own grim tale. It would be some comfort to think that their imprisonment was the work of Berlin and that the latter's liquidation might bring them freedom in keeping with Premier Malenkov's New Year's wishes to the American and all Western people. But with the Communist regimen nothing can be taken for granted, and it is the duty of the American Government to use all available means, through diplomatic channels and the United Nations, to press for their liberation.

1. PROBLEM

To evaluate the conduct of American prisoners of war in Korea, ascertain the reasons therefor, and determine what corrective measures are necessary to eliminate misconduct.

2. FACTS BEHIND THE PROBLEM

a. During U. S. operations in Korea in 1950-53, at least 5,685 U. S. military personnel (of whom 5,115 were Army) were taken prisoner by the enemy. Of these, over 1,000 died in captivity and 4,115 were repatriated subsequent to the armistice agreement. Twenty-one U. S. soldiers refused repatriation and remained with the communists. (Annex B, Interim Report of U. S. Battle Casualties, 31 December 1953).

b. Estimates of the number of Americans who were captured and died in enemy prisoner of war camps have been considerably higher than official casualty figures, which show about 6,000 Americans as "missing in action". A Senate subcommittee investigating many war crimes concluded that more than 5,000 American prisoners of war died because of communist treatment. (Annex K, "Korean War Atrocities", Report of the Senate Committee on Government Operations, 11 January 1954).

c. American prisoners of war experienced harsh treatment during captivity, and were subjected to vigorous interrogation and indoctrination by the enemy. (Annex C, Intelligence Considerations, and Annex D, Medical Considerations).

d. Individual reactions of American prisoners of war to communist indoctrination and interrogation ranged from determined resistance to active collaboration with the enemy. (Annex G, Intelligence Considerations).

e. Misbehavior before the enemy, misconduct as a prisoner, and aiding the enemy are specific offenses under the Uniform Code of Military Justice. (Annex E, Legal Considerations and Precedents).

f. U. S. Army policies and standards governing the conduct of troops subject to capture and conduct during captivity are expressed in its publications. The Uniform Code of Military Justice prescribes the minimum standard of conduct in such situations. (Annex F, Policies and Standards Governing Conduct of Troops).

g. U. S. Army training programs include instruction in evasion and escape, resisting interrogation and indoctrination, and survival. (Annex G, Training Considerations).

VIETNAM - SAIGON - 780 - APRIL 1973

1. A PRELIMINARY DEBRIEFING POINT FOR U.S. PILOTS SHOT DOWN OVER VINH PHU PROVINCE, NORTH VIETNAM /NVN/, WAS LOCATED AT THE LAM THAO SUPERPHOSPHATE PLANT /VJ381389/ NEAR THACH SON VILLAGE, LAM THAO DISTRICT, VINH PHU PROVINCE. TWO U.S. PILOTS WERE TAKEN TO THE DEBRIEFING POINT ON ONE OCCASION IN 1965; EIGHT, IN 1966; AND AN UNKNOWN NUMBER, IN 1967. THE PRISONERS WERE ESCORTED TO THE SITE BY PERSONNEL OF THE ARMED PUBLIC SECURITY FORCES /APSF/, AND STUDENTS FROM A NEARBY SCHOOL SERVED AS PERIMETER GUARDS. EACH TIME PRISONERS WERE BROUGHT TO THE SITE THEY RODE IN AN OPEN CAR OF CHINESE ORIGIN RESEMBLING AN AMERICAN JEEP. SOME OF THE ESCORT GUARDS RODE IN A LEAD CAR AND OTHERS RODE IN TWO CARS FOLLOWING THE PRISONERS. UPON THEIR ARRIVAL AT THE PLANT, THE GUARDS LINED UP, FORMING A CORRIDOR THROUGH WHICH THE PILOTS ENTERED THE BUILDING. AT THIS POINT A SOVIET, A CHINESE, AND A VIETNAMESE GREETED THE PILOTS AND LED THEM INTO THE BUILDING. THE PILOTS USUALLY REMAINED IN THE BUILDING FOR SEVERAL HOURS. Renewed League of MIA Families Request for Appointment

Once again, the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia seeks to meet you (Tab B).

They have nothing new to say, and I am capable of summarizing any developments for you. So I recommend turning down the request, and I will call Ann Griffiths separately to say you have instructed me to see her.

However, a letter from you is important to indicate that you take recent refugee reports of sighting of live Americans "seriously." This is simply good politics; DIA and State are playing this game, and you should not be the whistle blower. The idea is to say that the President is determined to pursue any lead concerning possible live MIAs.

Do not offer an opinion as to whether those leads are realistic. Apparently you revealed skepticism to Congressman Gilman, and my recommended letter to the League walks you back from that.

RECOMMENDATION:

That you sign the letter at Tab A to Ann Griffiths.

December 13, 1988

Dear Mr. Brown:

I have your further letter, of December 3, concerning your study of questions connected with the American prisoners of war who fell into Russian hands in the final months of the Second World War. I have also received the many copies of documents that accompanied your letter, as well as the volume of reminiscences of your Vietnam service, the gift of which exchanges with the Russians on the part of both the British and ourselves, and of the results obtained.

I can only give you one memory that may be of interest to you. I thought it, at the time, highly probable that General Golitsky, while wearing a regular military uniform, was actually a high official of the then M.K.V.D. and not of the regular Russian military authorities. I believe I made my view plain to General Deane, but that he felt that he had no choice but to deal with the man assigned for this purpose, and had no formal grounds for questioning his status. I could understand his position, but I resented this sort of obfuscation and saw it as an attempt to prevent contact between our Military Mission and the regular Russian military establishment.

Very sincerely,

Dear Ms. Bartlett,

I am sending, as per my conversation yesterday with Dolores Apodaca Alfond of Washington State, a letter and attachments for Mr. Gorbachev relating to my research and publishing of recently declassified documents concerning US prisoners of war in Soviet control in 1945 and thereafter.

I trust that you will hand them to President Gorbachev's personal assistant and I wish to thank you in advance for the valuable service you perform for the surviving prisoners and for the United States by doing so.

I am sending one set of documents by fax and a larger packet by Federal Express on 31 May, 1990, telephoning your office when they are on the way.

The Honorable Mikhail Gorbachev
President and General Secretary
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

President Gorbachev,

I wish to send my best wishes to the people of the Soviet Union and to you for your extraordinary leadership. The long history of Russia has been enhanced by your efforts for glasnost.

I am one of the American researchers who have uncovered formerly-secret official documentation in the U.S. National Archives and through Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), of American and Western Allied prisoners-of-war remaining under the control of Soviet authorities after the 1918-1920 American intervention in Russia, the Second World War in 1945 and the Korean War in 1953. In addition I have uncovered witnesses among former US Intelligence officers who have admitted that US POWs missing after the 1973 American withdrawal from Vietnam, had been listed as "Moscow Bound". The total missing since 1945 is recorded as many thousands of Americans. I have published these findings and I include copies of my HIDDEN POWs OF THE COLD WAR, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States (VFW) Magazine, February 1990 and other articles.

My appeal to you is that the Soviet state now release all surviving American prisoners in the USSR who wish to return home- and use its influence to gain freedom for those held by communist governments in Asia. The existence of these prisoners of three wars has long been secretly-classified by the US Government from the American people, apparently in the national security interest of avoiding a possible military confrontation with the USSR. Thus, it appears to be most difficult for the United States Government to be the first to publicly demand the repatriation of living prisoners. The Soviet Union could create a completely new relationship with the United States by finally addressing this last major secret of the Cold War and of Josef Stalin's regime, which is now emerging here. I am sure that my country would reciprocate in searching for missing Soviets in Afghanistan and Pakistan or in other areas of Soviet interest.

I will offer to do the most I can do, which is to meet with Soviet investigators or officials in the United States to assist them in understanding the American version of these events and to record for my book the Soviet version of events. I know you understand that I am only doing my duty for my fellow American servicemen.

With sincere respect

John M. G. Brown

VETERAN VIEWS

Hidden POWs of the Cold War: One Man's View

By John M.G. Brown

A series of signals from the Soviet Union asking for U.S. assistance in repatriating some 300 Soviet soldiers missing in Afghanistan and Pakistan offers a unique opportunity.

Reports from Soviet diplomatic sources appearing in the American press in 1989, indicating that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev had discussed this matter with President George Bush, demonstrates possible linkage in accounting for Russian MIAs in Afghanistan and American POWs and MIAs from the Vietnam War as well as previous wars.

A number of U.S. prisoners may have been transferred to the Soviet Union from Indochina and documentary evidence existed for the transfer of large numbers of U.S. POWs of the Korean War to the Soviet Union. The U.S. demanded their return in May 1954, but the Soviet Union denied holding American POWs "under guard."

And the existence and disappearance of American and British POWs under Soviet control in 1945 has been documented by this writer through declassification of thousands of formerly secret U.S. cables and reports in the National Archives.

Although many Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests have been denied me for "national security" reasons, some records have been obtained through FOIA. Interviews with 1945 participants have clarified other aspects of this hidden aspect of the Cold War.

In 1946 the Soviet Army liberated over a million Western Allied POWs and displaced persons in Nazi camps in Poland, eastern Germany and Austria. According to the Yalta Agreements they were to be repatriated to their native lands.

While some were relatively well-treated by front-line Russian troops, documentary evidence details how over 100,000 of these prisoners were forcibly retained by Soviet authorities. Included were hundreds of thousands of French, Belgians, Dutch and ethnic Jews who had survived the Nazi concentration camps.

Among them were tens of thousands of American, British and Commonwealth POWs whose kidnapping became a high-level national security secret. American and British prisoners were also among the more than 4,500,000 German and Japanese POWs retained as forced labor by the Russians.

On May 23, 1945, two weeks after the end of the war in Europe, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's chief POW negotiator with the Soviets, Maj. Gen. Ray Barker, stated in a secret report: "The SHAEF (Supreme Headquarters Allied Expeditionary Force) representatives came to the firm conviction that British and American prisoners of war were, in effect, being held as hostages by the Russians..."

Recently declassified U.S. and British documents record details of a Soviet "blackmail" operation executed by Soviet leader Joseph Stalin and his cohorts Molotov, Beria, Gorkov and others.

Their object was to obtain Allied compliance in the coerced and forcible repatriations of more than 5,000,000 Russians, Ukrainians, Czechs, Poles, Italians and other eastern Europeans. They also demanded U.S. diplomatic recognition of Communist regimes in Poland and elsewhere in Eastern Europe.

An additional benefit to the Russians was to be the labor of thousands of technologically advanced (by Soviet standards) Allied prisoners. The actions of highly placed Soviet spies in the British and American governments severely compromised the Allies and greatly assisted the Soviets in this operation.

Repatriation of POWs was a secret topic of the 1945 founding United Nations Conference in San Francisco, the 1945 Hopkins-Stalin meetings and the Potsdam Conference. It appears that Field Marshal Alexander, Gen. George Patton and to a lesser extent others including Gen. Eisenhower, resisted this chain of events prior to and following the unsuccessful September 1945 foreign ministers' meetings.

Well after the war, Alexander cabled London: "Difficulty in tracing BR/US PWs in Russian zone." He reported that U.S. and British Though most American prisoners held by the Germans were liberated by U.S. troops (as shown here), possibly as many as 20,000 U.S. POWs were not repatriated from Soviet-controlled territories. U.S. Army

J.S.

POWs were being shipped east into Russia "in boxcars with German PWs."

Meanwhile, Patton's Third Army had located thousands more American and British prisoners being withheld after the war by the Soviets in Austria. According to once-top secret U.S. documents, decisions were first made by President Franklin D. Roosevelt and then by President Harry Truman that the potential losses of a 1945-46 war with Russia were not worth the possible recovery of some 20,000 American and 20,000 or more British and Commonwealth POWs.

Implementation of this policy was passed on to the responsible departments and agencies. Evidence has surfaced of the secret return of Allied prisoners for the forcibly repatriated Soviet citizens of whom Soviet dissident Alexander Solzhenitsyn, Lord Bethell and Nikolai Tolstoy have written so eloquently.

Repatriations to Stalin's GULAG were marred by mass suicides. Stalin reneged on full reciprocity and most of the Allied POWs disappeared into secret, special camps. Stalin's failure to reciprocate in the repatriations of 1945-47 resulted in an official tendency to minimize the extent of Allied losses.

In classified U.S. and British documents, the total number of prisoners known to be in Soviet hands was scaled down to some 5,500 Americans and 8,500 British and Commonwealth troops. Continuing research indicates that these figures reflect a shifting of known prisoners into other categories. All told, some 78,000 Americans remain unaccounted for from WWII.

The acute need for intelligence inside Soviet territory to locate the large number of missing Allied prisoners for possible secret rescues or negotiations led to U.S. Soviet air battles in Europe and U.S. naval threats to the Russians in Manchuria.

This crisis led to the first major American covert actions after WWII inside Soviet territory executed by the Office of Strategic Services (OSS), Army G-2/SSU, the State Department's Office of Policy Coordination, and later the CIA.

Among other assets, they used existing German intelligence networks. The perceived need for extreme security in this matter helped create a chain of events leading to the present debate on the limits of secrecy in a free society.

The latest Soviet statement of concern for the return of their missing Afghan War prisoners should be viewed as a public diplomatic signal of their willingness to consider an exchange. This should not, however, be permitted to become a forced repatriation of those 40-50 former Soviet prisoners known to be living in freedom in the U.S. and Canada.

What would be in order, however, is the use of American influence to gain control of those Soviet POWs in Afghanistan and Pakistan who wish to return home.

Given the present glasnost mood and Gorbachev's statements on Stalin's crimes, it might finally be to the Soviet Union's advantage to reveal the truth about American POWs from WWII.

Dear Steve:

This is an acknowledgement of your letter of August 18 which was forwarded to my vacation address and delayed by Hugo.

John Brown is a sincere man and has spent hundreds of hours on the MIA problem. My gut feeling is that his allegations are documented.

As you appreciate public attitudes toward the Vietnam War MIA problem are far different from those following World War II.

Soviets urgently seek names of MIAs

Government thinks 100 to 200 alive in Afghanistan

By Colla Pickover
AP Wire Service

KABUL, Afghanistan — Nothing pains Soviet officials here quite as much as attempts to draw parallels between their nation's bitter experience in Afghanistan and the U.S. withdrawal from South Vietnam.

By no odd point, at least, they compare their loss to that of the Americans.

Think what an emotional issue the question of MIAs is for Americans, said a high-ranking Soviet diplomat in a recent interview. "Do you think our missing soldiers are any less to us? You can say there is no higher priority for us than accounting for these men."

According to Moscow's official tally, more than 10,000 troops died in combat against Afghanistan's insurgents since the Soviet intervention in 1979. At least another 37,000 were wounded before the Soviet military withdrawal was completed Feb. 15. An additional 313 are listed as missing in action.

"There is reason to believe that at least 100, and perhaps as many as 200, are alive and being held captive," said an official of the International Committee for the Red Cross. "The Russians are extremely keen on finding them."

Asped to U.S. — Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader, has personally raised the MIA issue with President Bush, saying they the United States will use its influence with the rebels to locate the prisoners, according to a spokesman of the Soviet Embassy here.

The CIA is the major foreign source of the mujahideen movement, according to the guerrillas with arms. "We've applied many times for help from the American government," said a Soviet Embassy official. "This is something you Americans could do easily and for which the Soviet people would feel the deepest gratitude."

The missing Soviet troops are believed to be held in rebel camps inside Afghanistan, as well as in camps in Pakistan and Iran.

"We are sure there are Soviet POWs inside Pakistan, but when ever we learn of one's existence, they disappear," said the embassy official. "It is extremely frustrating."

No access since 1984.

The Moslem guerrillas — mujahideen — operate freely from bases in the area of Peshawar, Pakistan. They also control vast areas of the Afghan countryside.

Red Cross officials support Moscow's claim that Soviet POWs are being held in Pakistan but said the organization has had no direct access to them since 1984.

In that year, the Red Cross negotiated the release of 11 Soviet POWs with the Pakistan government, an agreement that kept the Soviets in Switzerland for two years before repatriation.

"Since then, there has been nothing," said a Red Cross official. "It's been a complete blackout."

Tragedy impossible

Twenty Soviet prisoners held in a Pakistan warehouse were massacred in 1985, according to one reliable account.

The Soviets are desperate to learn even their names, said an international relief official. "But all we know is roughly when the incident occurred and how it occurred."

Apparently, the mujahideen simply gunned these prisoners down in retaliation for some Soviet military atrocity inside Afghanistan.

Relief officials like the Soviets, accuse the United States of not doing more to secure information on the POWs.

They concede, however, there is probably little Washington could do to win their release.

The mujahideen are quite sure they held something very valuable, one such official said. "Still, perhaps the Americans could learn their names and pass the information along, at the very least, to help ease the minds of these men's families."

The Soviet Union insists it holds no mujahideen prisoners. But it is believed that the Afghan government, once which Moscow wielded enormous influence, holds upwards of 12,000 rebel captives.

The Soviets could probably convince Kabul to give up these prisoners in exchange for the POWs, but there is nothing so far to suggest the mujahideen are willing to bargain, said a relief official.

WILLIAM STEVENSON

They retrieved confidential messages between Moscow, London and Washington following the Yalta Conference in February, 1945 when Stalin, Roosevelt and Churchill met for the last time. Brown believes "it was then that the the West agreed to the forced repatriation of two million 'Soviet citizens' who were in Allied hands. The

From this he concluded if U.S. publishers were being told the same yarn, he and Ashworth might as well print the bare details in the veterans' newsletter. "Then," he tells me, "maybe someone will let us publish the whole truth."

Regards,

The Russians lost in a quagmire, unable to win the war, and they were left with a million dead and wounded, their best brigades, their fighting men, many of the missing may be in the United States and Canada, the Soviets claim, but these men need not fear punishment. "Think what we emotional issue the question of MIA's is for Americans... Do you think our missing soldiers mean any less to us? A Soviet diplomat asked in a recent Russian Globe article.

Searching for lost men can be as costly as the original war. For the last 30 years, the U.S. has spent $1 billion on the subject. Still the number is unknown accurate. For aught we know, the missing may be in the Soviet Union. President Mikhail Gorbachev approaches President Bush for assistance in this own MIA dilemma. U.S. Veteran brings you this special documented report of a well-known Soviet agenda which abducted and enslaved

The American National Archives have now been searched by 170 researchers, including the authors, originally involved in the project. The results of the search are being collated in a document listing the fate of American prisoners left behind in the USSR. Many records are still scarce classified after 44 years, however, and some documents have come posthumously to light, have been obtained, nevertheless.

The research, coupled with information obtained from the blacklisting operation at the end of the war, including tens of thousands of American, British and other Western Allied POWs as well as the Soviet, Chinese, Japanese, German, Italian, and Polish prisoners of war, has been made available to the public. The project was headed by the late Professor Desmond O'Malley, who was succeeded by Professor David G. Allen, Anthony Eden, Dwight D. Eisenhower, Clement Churchill, Harry Truman, Dwight D. U.S. and British POWs as hostages.

In Poland and the Soviet Union, the Germans forced hundreds of thousands of Allied POWs and civilians to retreat to the rear. Many of them were left behind and taken by the enemy. In the Soviet Union, they were sent to the Red Army in January and early February, 1945, prior to the Yalta Agreement on repatriation of prisoners, the American Embassy in Moscow began receiving reports of U.S. prisoners in Soviet hands through U.S. intelligence. Sen. Charles McNary, D-Ind., told the Senate that Gen. George Kennerly, U.S. Ambassador to the Soviet Union, had learned that Gen. John Deane, Chief of the U.S. Military Mission, had already begun consulting with demands for information from the Russians.

From the mounting evidence that many Americans had been held incommunicado by the Soviets, who hadn't revealed the fact, Kennan, as chargé d'affaires, demanded contact with the prisoners and subsequently suggested a statement to the

Another forecast of trouble occurred when the Embassy received a note dated February 14, 1945, signed by F.H. Brooks, which read, "Here in 'Nowy Sącz' are eight officers and twelve NCO's (non-commissioned officers) all of whom are mostly Americans and British airmen. At the moment we are with the Russian Army in Nowy Sącz for over three weeks and no responsible parties have been notified of our presence and whereabouts. We have no freedom and have been told we are internees."

Thank you very much, Mr. Ambassador [Kellogg]. I am delighted to be here. This is an extraordinarily prestigious group, and I feel very honored that you have asked me to speak to you. I see in the audience many old friends and a number of colleagues from the United Nations here, and I will try to be as brief as possible because my experience has been that the speaker speaks about what interests him and the questions are what forces him to speak about what the audience wants to hear. I will, therefore, briefly run across the field of American foreign policy.

First, my instructions from the President as far as the United Nations is concerned are to reform it and not to kill it. I think that's very important. If the United Nations did not exist, it would have to be invented. It has a number of shortcomings, but it also is unique and offers an opportunity to so many nations to keep contact with others. The smaller nations have relatively few diplomatic posts, and yet at the United Nations they can be in

The POW/MIA Question: National Honor and Foreign Policy

 A Letter to the National Committee on American Foreign Policy by
John M. G. Brown

National honor and national interests are not mutually exclusive. To the extent that national honor is undermined by actions that threaten the morale of citizen-soldiers, their families, friends, and others it becomes a matter of security and therefore also a foreign policy concern. What I am alluding to is, of course, the POW/MIA tragedy in Southeast Asia.

As is well known, Washington's decision to quit Vietnam was accompanied by an endeavor to forget the immediate past that led to the U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia. In this attempt Washington violated the tradition of the citizen-soldier who, in return for performing honorably the profession of soldiering, with all that that implies, especially the willingness to die and the expectation of being honored by the nation instead of being abandoned. By continuing to transgress the tradition by not resolving the POW/MIA tragedy honorably, the United States is continuing to turn its back on the people who defend the country and is thus continuing to court disaster. To prevent this from happening it is vital to recognize the tragedy, to recognize once and for all that for millions of Americans the war is not yet over, and to act accordingly.

Before suggesting a course of action, I shall briefly review several salient facts: (1) Of more than 500 Americans held prisoners by the Pathet Lao in Laos, not one has returned; (2) of hundreds captured or missing in South Vietnam, many have never been freed; (3) beyond those returned from North Vietnam in Operation Homecoming in 1973, many others are known to have been captured. (Of those returned, none was missing an arm or a leg or was disfigured by burns, ejections from flaming aircraft notwithstanding.) The presence of POWs

AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY Newsletter

DECEMBER 1988

In Vietnam has been corroborated by, among others, hundreds of live sightings on the part of U.S. prisoners, refugees, camp inmates, former South Vietnamese soldiers and officers, by Robert Garwood, the last U.S. prisoner to leave Vietnam in 1979, by highly suggestive satellite evidence and communications interceptions, and finally, the evidence submitted by the highly decorated U.S. officers Mark Smith, Robert Howard, and Melvin McIntire, orders to destroy incriminating evidence or risk destruction of career and character notwithstanding.

Because the present administration and past administrations have done next to nothing to resolve the problem, a wounded veteran of the Vietnam War, a member of the National Advisory Board of Skyhawk II Project—Account for POW/MIA's, and the chairman of the POW/MIA Committee of the National Vietnam Veterans Coalition, urge the President to appoint immediately a capable, prominent citizen to negotiate a successful resolution of the tragedy. That citizen must be helped by a competent office staff and by the vast intelligence capabilities at the disposal of the country.

The negotiator must be instructed to (1) reopen the bona fide offer made by Vietnam to "sell" an unspecified number of U.S. POWs, something President Reagan rejected in 1981 (see the editorial in The Wall Street Journal, August 19, 1988); (2) discuss the issue with Communist China; (3) discuss the tragedy with the Soviet Union. Evidence seems to indicate that the Soviet Union may be holding some of our Vietnam prisoners who were transferred because of their specialized electronic warfare training.

In short, what is being suggested here is nothing that is out of line. There are ample precedents. For example, from the depth of a far more severe defeat Chancellor Konrad Adenauer obtained the release of German army prisoners from Soviet labor camps. Now the last of the Bay of Pigs prisoners are being released.

What is unacceptable is a do-nothing policy or one that aims at a token release of only two or three Americans who may well be branded as former deserters or collaborators.

AFHQ microfilm reel 139-B has been declassified and may be examined in our research room. If you wish to order a microfilm reproduction, please follow the instructions on the back (pink copy) of the enclosed MATF Form 72. The remaining AFHQ microfilm reels cited in your letter, specifically 108-F, 457-B, 144-Special, 97-F, 557-F, 535-F, 486-B, and 180-F remain security classified. Similarly, the records you have cited as box 3 of Entry 220-A (Records of the G-2 Section, 15th Army Group) and boxes 12 through 15 of Entry 53-A (Records of the G-3 Section relating to special operations) in Record Group 331 also remain security classified. Since we must submit these records to the Declassification Division for review, we are unable to complete the processing of your request within the ten days provided for by the Freedom of Information Act. The amended act (5 U.S.C. 552 (a)(6) (B)), provides that an agency may be allowed additional time to complete its review of the requested records if that agency is exercising due diligence in responding to the request.

In Record Group 342 we were unable to locate an eighth box of interrogation reports of repatriated Japanese POW's from the Soviet Union. We examined the box which follows immediately after the seven boxes of interrogation reports but the material contained therein is not relevant to your request. This, therefore, is not a denial of that portion of your request, as the requested records do not exist.

From Record Group 332, Records of the European Theater of Operations--U.S. Forces, European Theater, you requested debriefings of German Prisoners of War, presumably filed under the decimal 383.6. This portion of your request fails to meet certain tests of the FOIA. The House Committee on Government Operations (House Report No. 95-793) indicated that in making a request that "although you are not required under the FOIA to specify a document by name or title, your request must be reasonably describe the information sought." Additionally, the report of the House Government

Dear Chris,

I hope you are well. I am enclosing a list of PW related microfilm and documents which have been refused to me by the National Archives on the grounds that they are still classified, although nearly all of them are 44 years old. If, as certain USG officials have stated, we are wrong in our conclusions concerning US PWs remaining in Soviet hands in 1945, why then are we refused access to the appropriate records? On some of the requests I have waited nearly a year, (since November, 1988). This has obviously had the effect of government-imposed censorship, and has infringed on our constitutionally guaranteed freedoms, which I personally served in front-line combat to uphold. I am quite concerned that I (and my colleague, Ashworth) get full access to these documents as we do not feel that anyone else is well-grounded enough, in the thousands of other documents in our possession, to interpret them correctly. Their significance might be entirely misunderstood without all the concurrent cables and reports. (I am also attaching copies of some of the original correspondence by me and Archives personnel.)

1) Record Group (RG) 331 decimal 389.6 serials 1743, Austria OSS Reports, July, 1945, microfilm on reel R-459-F. I have been informed over 3 months ago by Richard Boylan, Asst Chief/Military Reference Branch, National Archives, that this was "referred to another government agency for further review." We do not want weeded portions of it but the entire report including cover piece and end which would clarify how many pages were in the original. Many OSS documents have been released to researchers such as Bradley Smith, author of The Shadow Warriors, but we have been denied access to practically all OSS documents, apparently because the subject of our research is US prisoners of war.

2) RG 331, serial 170 FAN Reports from AGWAR, Vol. 19, Sept 44- Feb. 1947, Microfilm on film reel R-15-N. I have heard nothing on this request in 10 months.

3) RG 331, serial # 20, PWB Correspondence, May 44-July, 1945 Film reel R-112-G. (10 months wait on this, also.)

4) RG 331, serial # 17, (original ref. # 57 in finding aid) Intelligence Summaries, various, Vol. 2 June 45- Feb. 46 on film reel R-111-G. (10 months wait on this also.)

5) RG 331 serial # 431 SACMED (Supreme Allied Command Mediterranean) Field HQ, POW, June 45 to Sept. 1945, serial # 433, POW April 45 to June 45, and serial # 434 American POW April, 1945 to August, 1945 - all on microfilm reel R-108-E. (Original FOIA 29 May, 1989. I was told in writing on June 30th, 1989 that this was "still security classified".)

6) RG 331, Microfilm 574, 576, 577, 578, POW & DP (displaced persons) film reel R-457-B. ("still classified", 30 June, 1989)

7) RG 331, 383.6, serial # 3574, AFHQ, POW Jan-Sept 47, and serial # 3575 (383.7) Displaced Persons, Feb. to August 47, film R-144 special. ("still classified", 30 June, 89)

8) from catalog of the Combined British American records of the Mediterranean Theatre of Operations, WW II, Vol. 11 : p. 1198, serial 73, PWB sub-committee, Aug 44 to June 45, film R-97-E. ("still classified", 30 June, 1989.)

9) p. 1433, serial # 61 Project # 6, EYES ONLY, Aug 43 to July 47, and serial # 65 Project #10, POW, May 47 to Feb 48, both on film reel # R-557-E. ("still classified", 30 June, 1989)

10) p. 1433, serial 182 & 183, AFHQ G-5 Section, 1945-46, film R-535-E. ("still classified", 30 June, 1989)

11) p. 1467, serial 131 Displaced Persons and Repatriations, vol. 111 re: 45 to Aug 45, film reel R-486-B. F.I.I. ("still classified", 30 June, 1989)

12) p. 2058, serial 1 PW Reports and Ground Checks, film reel R-180-E. ("still classified", 30 June, 1989)

13) RG 331, E-220-A, AFHQ G-2 (1945 General Staff Intelligence), box 3, one copy each of all documents including covers and distribution lists.

(This item has been identified by Jo Ann Williamson, Chief of the Military Reference Branch, as "records of the G-2 Division 15th Army Group, and also: "remains security classified", on 30 June, 1989.)

14) RG 331, E-53 A, AFHQ G-3 Special Operations, 1945, boxes 12 through 15, one copy each all documents. ("remain security classified", 30 June, 1989)

15) RG 342, Interrogation Reports of Japanese PWs repatriated from Soviet penal labor camps. An 8th box which contains several hundred pages of intelligence debriefings of Japanese prisoners who saw American POWs in the Soviet prison camps. The existence of this box was admitted to John M. G. Brown, Thomas V. Ashworth and James Sanders, all in person at Suitland, Maryland, on November 21st, 1989, by Richard Boylan, Assistant Chief, Military Reference Branch, who further stated that it was under CIA control. Its existence has also been disclosed to John M. G. Brown by a former high-level CIA officer.

16) RG 332, Records of the European Theater and USFET, 383.6, repatriated German POW debriefings, involving sightings of or imprisonment with US POWs in the Soviet prison system by Germans repatriated from Russia up through the Adenauer era. These are also known as the WRINGER REPORTS, and we have a few of them. For the the Director of the Military Reference Branch, Ms Williamson, to say that my request "fails to meet certain tests of the FOIA", through failing to "reasonably describe the information sought", is ridiculous. There are over a thousand boxes of Wringer Reports, containing approximately one million two hundred thousand pages of documents. The Chief, Williamson, and Assistant Chief, Boylan know very well what this is, and have also been denying access to our research-colleague, James Sanders. (We have little doubt that what is there on the Americans is rapidly disappearing.) The Archivists have admitted to us of being under heavy pressure from Pentagon officers. We are not seeking all of them, but only the ability to study them and make copies of certain livesightings of Americans to add to what we have for our forthcoming book on the subject. Our object is accuracy.

Chris, I hope Senator Grassley and you can get these records released to us. We have already made it clear that we have no political axe to grind, and that the history of this tragic matter, through 44 years and three wars, is far bigger than any single President, except perhaps the one who could break the great riddle of resolving it. The more we have immersed ourselves in understanding it the more we see the terrible dilemma it has presented to our successive Presidents, leading directly to present-day hostage situations.

The majority of the American people however, know or suspect the truth, thereby making every government denial of the truth into a further erosion of the government's public credibility. In Europe, the WW II aspect of this matter is more generally known, as the French, Belgians and Dutch lost over half a million prisoners into Stalin's Gulag.

I look forward to hearing from you soon, and hearing of success. Please give give my highest regards to Andy, should you see him. Best Regards,

John M. G. Brown

Dear Mr. Brown:

This is in response to your Freedom of Information Act request of April 1, 1990, received by us on April 10, 1990 (our reference NN90-273).

We have submitted your request for the declassification of specific rolls of Air Force Headquarters (AFHQ) microfilm to our declassification unit for review.

Some of the items you requested have been declassified. AFHQ Records 26-2 microfilm R-720-A, Record Group 331, and seven boxes of interrogation reports of Japanese POWs repatriated from Soviet penal labor camps, Record Group 342, are available for use in our research room. enclosed is a copy of the accession description of the seven boxes in Record Group 342. 15
Ample

The Wringer Reports are debriefings of individuals of various nationalities repatriated from the Soviet Union roughly between 1946-56. These "reports" appear in bits and pieces scattered through-out the records of various military agencies. The largest collection of these reports are on 1,682 rolls of classified microfilm, among the records of Record Group 311. We do not have sufficient staff or time to declassify this body of records in its entirety and provide for the demands of other researchers. If there is a specific report or a number of specific reports that can be identified we would be pleased to have them reviewed for release. We do not consider this a denial of your FOIA because your request is too general. get rec'd
from Mr.
Gioro

In Record Group 335, there are two boxes of records under the decimal 383.6, among the Security Classified General Correspondence of the Secretary of the Army, 1953-56. These records were recently declassified and are available in our research room.

In Record Group 319, we have recently accessioned 16 boxes of classified records containing POW information. These records are presently being reviewed for declassification under a FOIA request. (Ample)

Record Group 330, records of the Munitions Board, Vice Chairman for Production and Requirements, Office of Petroleum Progress, contains "Wringer" Project Reports for 1950-51. These reports are housed in 10 classified boxes bearing titles that do not reflect the presence of POW information (i.e. Geological, Production and Natural Resources; Storage, Refineries, and Publications). If you know of any specific documents among these records that you would like reviewed, we would be glad to comply.

We hope we have been of assistance to you. If you have any further questions please let us know.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Brown:

Please excuse the delay in responding to your letter, but we took the liberty of forwarding it to our National Security Division for their comments and suggestions. We do appreciate your sharing your article "An American Sacrifice For Peace." It was well-written and informative, and you appear to have done a great deal of investigation into the U.S. government's handling of the fates of American POWs and MIAs.

I'm sorry to tell you that the material does not meet our current editorial needs. THE AMERICAN LEGION MAGAZINE has ongoing updates on the POW-MIA issue, and such reports are generated and researched by the Legion's National Security Division staff, or our own magazine staff.

Again, thanks for thinking of the magazine and sharing your article with us. —

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Brown:

Upon my return from Europe, I learned that the Editor-in-Chief of The American Legion Magazine had informed you that your article, "An American Sacrifice for Peace," would not be printed in our magazine.

Mr. Wheeler advises me that he consulted with our National Security Foreign Relations staff before making his decision.

I appreciate the material that both you and Carl Rice have been sending me in support of your article. However, as National Commander, I do not interfere with the editorial policies of The American Legion Magazine.

Even though your article will not be printed, please know that The American Legion will continue its efforts to resolve the POW/MIA issue in accord with our mandates on this vital issue.

Ms. Jo Ann Williamson
Chief
Military Reference Branch
Textual Reference Division
National Archives
Wash., DC 20408

Dear Ms Williamson,

I have your letter dated 18 July, 1990, evidently relating to my further FOIA requests to the Department of Defense and Department of State, apparently forwarded to the National Archives, concerning my search for documents reporting American prisoners of war in Soviet-surrogate captivity.

Once again you have seen fit to state that I have not "reasonably described" various documents I seek, and you have suggested I come to Washington to do research. I have worked in Sulland and Washington, and together with my research-colleague Thomas V. Ashworth, have declassified several thousand pages of documents relating to American POWs in Soviet/surrogate control. In this letter I intend to make it abundantly clear, for the record, why I have recently been trying to get my requests approved by mail. In my FOIA requests by mail I have repeatedly been denied access to documents and microfilm specifically identified by record group and decimal number, pertaining to American POWs in Soviet/surrogate control, either because they "remain security classified" or because they are not "reasonably described." At the same time the Pentagon has stated publicly that "no WW II/POW-related documents remain classified."

In 1988 and 1989 after traveling across the country several times to do research in the National Archives, I repeatedly faced deliberate obstruction by Archives personnel in attempting to research specifically identified official POW-related records, to wit:

1. When requesting certain specifically identified files, boxes, documents and microfilm containing information on American prisoners who disappeared in Soviet controlled areas I was made to wait all day long in some cases, and then deliberately brought the wrong material.

2. When I asked for the correct boxes or files I was told the Archives personnel (whose names I noted) were "too busy" or to "come back the next day". When I explained that I had come from California and that my time and resources were limited, I was told: "that's your problem."

3. I was repeatedly told by Archivist Richard Boylan and several others that many records I was requesting relating to WW II American POWs in the Soviet zone were "security classified." Sometimes these statements were made perfunctorily, and at other times the Archivist would state this after "checking."

4. When I attempted to do research in the pertinent OSS documents relating to the Soviet-occupied zones (under of Archivist John Taylor), I was repeatedly told they were all "security classified."

even though many of the files I wished to study have been opened to other researchers and noted in published work. I was also told that the 1945 Russian division (or section) of the OSS "did not exist."

5. Several times I requested boxes, files or microfilm listed in official finding aids by record group and decimal number and was told "they can't be found", or "they don't exist." When I would attempt to point out the contradiction, I would be told, "don't bother me with that again."

6. I eventually had a private conversation with an Archivist whom I had come to know years before in researching my first book, who revealed to me details of the handling of POW researchers by the Archives and the extreme pressure put on Archives personnel by Pentagon officers and officials to be uncooperative on anything to do with serious researchers on the subject of American prisoners of war.

7. You have also stated to me several times in writing that you do not consider your responses to my several previous and adequately-described requests for access to German POW debriefings (Wringer Reports), and various other U.S. POW records, a "denial under Freedom of Information Act." When I was working in the Archives I was repeatedly denied access to the boxes containing these documents, or was told "they couldn't be found", or, "they didn't exist."

The Department of Defense and the Department of State have written to me that all the documents I seek covering the period from 1945-1954 are in the custody of the National Archives. It is clear to me as a researcher and author that, taken together, all of the above actions by the National Archives constitutes complicity in a deliberate attempt to suppress documentary evidence of American POWs remaining in Soviet/surrogate control from 1945 onwards. For your information I have published newly uncovered facts on American POWs of three wars remaining in communist control which have reached millions of American veterans and their families. It is possible that at any time I may get the opportunity to do so again. I am also in the middle of writing a fully documented book on this subject and I intend to record the actions and names of the various officials who have obstructed investigations into the fate of thousands of American prisoners of war who remained in Soviet, North Korean, Chinese, Cuban, Vietnamese, Laotian and other hostile captivity over the past 45 years.

I sincerely hope therefore, that you will take my several previous FOIA requests and my above concerns seriously, and understand that my recent efforts to obtain the documents I seek by mail is based on past unsatisfactory experiences in the Archives. Rather than continually stating to me all the things you are not required to do, perhaps you might instead assign some individual to copy the documents and microfilm I have long ago requested and offered to pay for. I have no assurance whatsoever, should I travel to Washington to do further research, that the same behaviour would not reoccur.

Sincerely,

cc: Senator Charles Grassley Congressman Robert K. Dornan

Mr. John M. G. Brown

Petaluma, CA 95558

Dear Mr. Brown:

This is in response to your letter of August 7, 1990, to Ms. Jo Ann Williamson of the Military Reference Branch, relating to your various requests for records pertaining to Americans held as prisoners of war.

In order to have records declassified under the Freedom of Information Act, you must reasonably describe the records that you wish to have declassified. A reasonable description would include the name of the federal organization that created or maintained the records, for example the War Department General Staff, the name of an office within the organization, for example the Operations Division, a specific series of records created by that office, for example the Operations Division central decimal file, a specific date or at least year, and an appropriate file designation provided by an index or filing manual. Requests for records pertaining to a general subject, such as Americans held as prisoners of war, are not sufficiently detailed for us to locate the records and begin a declassification action.

We are unable to address the seven specific points you raise in your letter, because in each instance you do not identify the records to which you were denied access. If you could be more precise about these instances, we would be pleased to investigate the matter. If you would provide a list or description of the OSS documents which you were told were security classified with a letter requesting access under the Freedom of Information Act, we would be pleased to process the request for you. Could you also provide the citation for the published work that has already made use of these documents?

OSS, Bradley Smith

If you could provide in a Freedom of Information Act request specific citations for record groups, series, descriptions, the box numbers, files or microfilm to which you were denied access, we will, if the citations accurately describe a collection of records in our custody, immediately begin a declassification review of the records.

J.B.

Neither of the two archivists you mention in your letter remembers having conversations with you as described in your letter. If there are problems in communicating with the staff, we will do all we can to improve our communications with you. There is no pressure put upon the staff of the National Archives by officials of the Department of Defense, or by any other Federal Government agency, to be uncooperative with researchers dealing with the prisoner-of-war issue.

The National Archives, as an institution, is committed to assisting researchers in using the records in its custody, and one of our institutional goals is to declassify and make records available to all researchers. The National Archives is not attempting to suppress records pertaining to Americans held as prisoners of war.

We sympathize with your attempt to do research on a difficult topic, and we will do what we can to assist you. But your requests for assistance have to specifically identify the records in which you are interested.

The "Wringer Report" records that we located in the Records of Headquarters, U.S. Air Force (Air Staff), Record Group 341, and Records of the Office of the Secretary of Defense, Record Group 330, were declassified, and we can make them available in the research room in the Washington National Records Center Building in Suitland, Maryland.

We are still processing your Freedom of Information Act requests for the microfilmed records of Allied Force Headquarters, Records of Allied Operational and Occupation Headquarters, World War II, Record Group 331, and for sixteen boxes in accessions 64A-2224 and 66A-3219, Records of the Army Staff, Record Group 319. We will inform you when the declassification review is complete.

Sincerely,

The POW Conspiracy

At the close of his article "No MIA Conspiracy" (op-ed, Aug. 24), Stephen Rosenfeld wrote "my own sense of things is that the Americans who were taken prisoner in Vietnam have been honorably served by those charged with pursuing their fate. Does that make me part of the conspiracy?"

The answer is that nearly all of the "hundreds and perhaps thousands of officials" Rosenfeld referred to did play a part, usually minor, in ensuring that the full truth on American and Allied POWs held by the Soviets and their surrogates after World War II, Korea and Vietnam would not be revealed to the American public. The matter has been a national security concern since the development of the Soviet nuclear threat to the very existence of the United States. All the officials and officers who have taken part in suppressing the truth of Soviet-surrogate-held American POWs have faced a painful moral choice while doing their lavishly ordered duty.

Based on thousands of declassified official documents and supporting eyewitness accounts obtained during seven years of investigation and research, it is clear that thousands of American POWs have been secretly held by the Soviets and their surrogates since 1945. The numbers of Americans thus illegally withheld appear to have been approximately 30,000 in 1945, 4,000 to 5,000 (or more) after 1953 and perhaps as many as 1,000 after 1973. These Americans, and many thousands more Allied POWs, were withheld for ransom and blackmail, used as forced labor and for espionage purposes. In addition I can document the secret withholding of American POWs at the 1918-1920 intervention in Russia in Lubyanka prison in Moscow and the Solovkiy Islands GULAG forced-labor camps until at least the 1980-1930 period.

In answer to Rosenfeld's final question: All major-circulation U.S. publications I have contacted, with the exception of the VFW Magazine, have declined to publish documentable facts of the history of U.S. prisoners of war held by Communist nations. These publications have apparently declined to even investigate the matter seriously. It is therefore difficult to escape the conclusion that the editors of such publications have avoided publishing such historically significant material in the interest of some higher political purpose.

Rosenfeld accused people like me of "turning on our own government." It might be in order to state that my family helped found and protect the revolutionary government of the United States in 1776 that I in my turn served that government in first-line combat and that it was the intention of the Founding Fathers that our government be constantly held accountable to the people. That is the principle for which the tens of thousands of missing American POWs fought, and that is why people such as myself consider that we are merely doing our duty toward our fellow American servicemen by uncovering the truth about their fate.

AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER

Were Some POWs Left Behind?

THE FOURTH of July is the right day to consider whether all those who contributed in their time to maintaining the independence and freedom that the holiday marks have received their due. We refer specifically to the American fighting men, captured or missing in the country's wars, who either may have been left behind alive and in enemy hands or may not have been fully accounted for. For decades the official government position has been that there is no credible evidence that American prisoners of war from the two world wars, Korea and Vietnam are still detained. Yet the expanding public record of inquiry into the situation of these thousands of men suggests that it is too soon to put their fate out of mind. While it seems true that there is no credible positive evidence that any are still alive, there still remains a jarring measure of arbitrariness about the basis on which the Pentagon has officially pronounced them dead or has otherwise accounted for them. The matter cannot yet be put finally to rest.

It is a deadly serious thing to suggest that the country may not have used every resource at its command to pursue American prisoners and reported prisoners diligently. But two sorts of evidence have inclined us to edge from skepticism to agnosticism on this issue. The first includes historical documentation such as that presented in an article on the opposite page today. The plot of it is that for various political and bureaucratic reasons, the missing of prisoners has not always been the top American priority.

The second sort of evidence includes the discrepancies in the accounting of POWs, MIAs and KIA-BNRs (killed in action-body not recovered) among combatants in the Vietnam War. In a typical instance, a Vietnamese refugee's sighting of a 1967 shootdown was matched up with the shootdown of a surviving Navy pilot who was then repatriated in 1973. But that pilot subsequently contradicted the specific details of the refugee's report. Where, then, is the other pilot whose shootdown correlates much more closely with the refugee's account? This example comes from a sober new report by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee's Republican staff—a Jesse Helms operation that poses questions that will not go away.

Partly in response to such goading, the Bush administration has gotten Vietnam to let it open an office in Hanoi to investigate reports of live sightings. The administration has also asked the Soviet Union for any help it can give in accounting for missing servicemen from the world wars, Korea, Vietnam and Cold War shooting incidents. These are useful steps, but are they enough? Some 16 senators are now calling for formation of a select committee to assess the government's efforts to track down POWs and MIAs. There have been previous probes, but not of the kind to bolster public confidence. The recent charges of an official coverup by the colonel formerly in charge of the Pentagon's MIA office, for example, were brushed off by an "internal management inquiry." The Helms report makes the further suggestion that Vietnam's offer to open its territory to American search should prompt the Pentagon to reciprocate and open its "territory"—its POW-MIA files.

One does not have to believe that the U.S. government has engaged in a devious and misguided conspiracy in order to admit the possibility that things might have been done differently at many points along the way. International relocation now provides new opportunities abroad for search and review. The Pentagon has its own profound obligation to respond.

A 70-Year-Old Hostage Crisis

Some American POWs were reported in declassified live sightings as alive in forced-labor camps and "unrequited" years. Soviet citizenship and Russian names were reportedly assigned to American, British and French survivors in secret Soviet camps. Some 78,000 Americans remain missing from World War II. Additional U.S. prisoners captured during Cold War intelligence missions or kidnapped in Europe were also released and reported alive in gulf camps. Information on several of these cases was specifically sought in the U.S. diplomatic note of last April.

During the Korean War, the North Koreans and Chinese demanded repatriation of tens of thousands of U.S. and national who refused to return to Communist control. Upward to repeat the errors of 1945-46, the Truman administration adopted a new policy of voluntary repatriation. The Commission revealed by secretly withholding the names of U.S. and U.N. POW-MIA's.

In August 1983, Gen. James Van Fleet, retired commander of the U.S. 8th Army in Korea, said: "A large percentage of the 6,000 American soldiers listed as missing in action in Korea are still alive." According to declassified CIA and other sources, an estimated 2,000 or more U.S. POW-MIA's were reported transferred to the Soviet Union from secret Soviet-run camps in China. In May 1964 the United States demanded their return to the new, pro-Chinese government, which denied holding "American" prisoners. "Secret" Soviet government. Sightings of Korean War POWs in the Soviet Union, China and North Korea have persisted into recent years. Presumptive findings of death and the recovery of remains (which were assigned to the names of the missing) gradually reduced the already minimal number of U.S. prisoners acknowledged by U.S. authorities to be in Communist control from just under 1,000 in 1964 to 380.

Permanent reports from Indochinese refugees and from Marine Pvt. Robert Garwood, the last acknowledged U.S. POW to leave Vietnam (in 1979), indicated that perhaps 1,000 or more American prisoners from among the more than 2,500 U.S. missing and presumed dead in Vietnam and Laos remained in captivity following the 1973 return of 591 POWs. The Vietnamese demanded both U.S. diplomatic recognition and $3 billion to $4 billion in postwar aid—as secretly promised by President Nixon but rejected by Congress—for the release of prisoners they publicly denied holding. U.S. diplomatic efforts have thus far produced largely fragmentary human electrical remains from Southeast Asia, later assigned to the names of missing Americans.

Through their intercepted, decoded orders, the North Vietnamese were known by a U.S. Air Force and National Security Agency analyst, whose name must be withheld, to have assembled pre-selected U.S. prisoners from North and South Vietnam at a camp near Vinh, where they were interrogated by Soviet intelligence officers. These Americans were categorized within NSA as "MIP" or Moscow Board. A declassified CIA cable confirms that U.S. POWs in North Vietnam were interrogated by Soviet and Chinese personnel and dressed in civilian clothing for transport to unknown destinations. From Vinh, the prisoners were shipped to another camp near the Pacific Sea headquarters of Sam Heng, Laos, where Soviet operatives determined which Americans had tactical or intelligence value, and those POWs, according to the NSA analyst, were transported to the Soviet Union. Those deemed uncooperative but also unworkable, such as Navy Capt. Larry Van Ameringen, were sent to other, certain death at forced labor on the Ho Chi Minh trail.

The NSA analyst has offered testimony and sworn affidavits to Congress on the fact that only 5 percent of the hundreds of U.S. POWs he tracked through intercepts were recovered by the Communists. Approximately 300 or more POWs were reported transferred by air and sea to high-tech development areas in the Soviet Union.

On the Soviet side, there are a few recent positive glimmers. An American who wanted to repatriate two Soviet POWs from Afghanistan in 1989 reportedly delivered hundreds of declassified U.S. POW-related documents (dated 1918-80) from the National Archives to researchers in Moscow and to three members of the Supreme Soviet, in the Moscow News of April 20, authorities in the Shantien town of Indochina invited relatives of American, French and Japanese "warrior" POWs who died in Soviet concentration camps to visit their late's protected graves.

Michael Gorchakov's hopes of recovering missing U.S. aid could well be made to depend on how helpful the Soviet Union is about living American POW-MIA's who disappeared in Indochina and about allowing recognition of any survivors of earlier wars who were given Soviet citizenship.

The issue of Cold War tensions should encourage President Bush to address the American people on the history of the POW-MIA issue. A presidential decision to declassify long-classified documentary information could begin to heal a deep national wound.

The writer, a novelist infrequently in Vietnam, is author of the forthcoming book on American prisoners, "Missing Remains."

It is heartening that the United States has now formally asked Moscow for information on American prisoners who came under Soviet control during World War II, the Cold War, Korea and Vietnam. The request should help bring to broad attention a problem that has festered since World War I. It is fairly introduced in a new report by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Republican staff, which examines American prisoners of war and Americans missing at action in Soviet and Soviet-occupied control going back more than 70 years.

According to declassified U.S. cables and other documents in the National Archives and to eyewitness accounts, in 1919, Lenin's new Bolshevik regime used hundreds of secretly held American, British and French POW-MIA's (members of a force sent to suppress the regime) as hostages in a demand for U.S. diplomatic recognition. Many of the 70 U.S. MIAs and 57 "prisoners" died continued to be withheld after an exchange of Americans aid for prisoners in 1921. In 1930, approximately 40 to 50 U.S. military POWs were reported by an eyewitness, Latvian-American escapee Alexander Gerasim, to be alive and in the Lubyanka prison and Solovki Islands forced-labor camps. After the United States recognized the Soviet regime in 1933, some political detainees were returned and assigned to the names of missing men. The hundreds of missing Allied prisoners of 1919, and many others, disappeared. In 1945, declassified records of the Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force, indicate, the Red Army overran an estimated 1.5 million Allied POWs and displaced persons held by the Germans. Contrary to the Yalta Agreements, American officers were refused access to nearly all Soviet-controlled POW camps in Europe. According to recently declassified U.S. documents, approximately 500,000 of these prisoners subsequently disappeared. The documents indicate that about 20,000 U.S. POWs and MIAs were held in "sanctuary" after VE Day by Stalin to ensure Allied repatriation of millions of Soviet citizens and to obtain U.S. and Allied aid and diplomatic recognition of Soviet support regimes in East Europe. Declassified U.S. documents reveal that in March and April 1948, the Roosevelt and Truman administrations decided against the use of force to recover American POWs in order to ensure Soviet participation in the Japanese war and the postwar United Nations.

Still-living U.S. POWs were in Martin Singel, who escaped from Soviet-controlled Soling IV-8 Maderby and reported many Americans left behind, were extracted to Russia and told the matter was being "investigated." Of 90,000 U.S. POWs officially reported returned to Europe by June 1946, 25,000 had been MIAs and known to be prisoners. Documents reveal that administrative "presumptive findings of death" reduced the official number of "currently held" known U.S. POWs from 12,800 or more in June 1946 to 5,414 by the following January. Tens of thousands more U.S. MIAs were also presumed dead.

ADDENDUM (P 111) FEBRUARY NOV 15

25. Senator Kerry asked Mr. Sheetz for the number of unaccounted for Americans (POW/MIA) at the time of the 1973 Paris Peace Accords? After Operation Homecoming?

The database listing unaccounted-for Americans has always been a dynamic one. As the services added names during the war, persons were also being accounted for, for instance by escaping captivity, through early release from captivity, and as U.S. forces recovered and identified remains. It was only after Homecoming that individuals whom the services declared KIA/BNR were added to this list. After Homecoming the services also added additional theater losses (some distant from Southeast Asia) and several individuals who had originally been declared AWOL but whose status was changed to MIA. During the period between Homecoming and the fall of Saigon and of Cambodia, additional Americans became missing, while others were accounted for by remains recovery. It is no longer possible to reconstruct exactly what names and numbers the database included on any one day, therefore the following breakdown is based on information currently contained in the DIA data base.

1. Unaccounted for at signing of Paris Peace Accords on 27 January 1973, and body not recovered by U.S. forces and subsequently identified. 3,128 (Tab A)

2. Missing between 27 January 1973 and 2 April 1973, and body not recovered by U.S. forces and subsequently identified. 12 (Tab B)

3. POWs returned during Operation Homecoming, 12 February 1973-1 April 1973. 591 (Tab C)

4. Unaccounted for at completion of Homecoming, 2 April 1973. 2547 (Tab D)

5. Missing between 30 March 1973 and 15 May 1975, and body not recovered by U.S. forces and subsequently identified. 36 (Tab E)

6. Americans accounted for post-Homecoming, as of 11 December 1991. 316 (Tab F)

7. Unaccounted-for Americans, as of 11 December 1991. 2,267 (Tab G)

IT IS MY VIEW THAT THE GOVERNMENT HAS TAKEN UP COMPLICATING DOCUMENTATION INTO A SHORT REPORT DISPUTING THE CIL-HI CONCLUSIONS. THEREFORE, I FEEL IT IS IMPORTANT TO GIVE AN OVERVIEW OF THE DIFFERENCES OF OPINION BETWEEN THE "OFFICIAL" STAND OF THE U. S. GOVERNMENT AND MY CONCLUSIONS.

THE U. S. GOVERNMENT POSITION IS BASED ON FACTS OF MISINFORMATION WHICH WERE NOT ONLY DEVELOPED IN 1966 THROUGH THE EARLY 1970'S, BUT WERE PRESENTED TO AND USED BY CIL-HI TO CONCLUDE THAT THE REMAINS IN QUESTION ARE THOSE OF MR. MARK W. DENNIS. THE FACTS WHICH I PRESENT, ON THE OTHER HAND, SHOW THAT THE REMAINS IN QUESTION COULD NOT POSSIBLY BE THOSE OF DENNIS.

THE MISTAKES, INTENTIONAL MANUFACTURING OF FALSE EVIDENCE, MISINFORMATION GENERATED, AND USE OF ONLY SELECTED EVIDENCE BY THE U. S. GOVERNMENT AGENCIES HAS PRODUCED A STORY THAT READS LIKE A FAIRY TALE. THE RESULTS HAVE BEEN DEVASTATING TO THE FAMILY OF MARK DENNIS. THE FINANCIAL COSTS HAVE BEEN HIGH AND CONTINUE TO RISE. ABOVE ALL THAT, THE REAL ISSUE IS THE DAMAGE DONE TO MARK DENNIS. HE PRESENTLY HAS NO RIGHTS. HE WAS ABANDONED BY THE COUNTRY HE MAY STILL BE SERVING. HE HAS NEVER BEEN ASKED FOR BY HIS GOVERNMENT IN AN ACCOUNTING OF THE MISSING IN SOUTHEAST ASIA. BUT PERHAPS WORST OF ALL, HE HAS NO ONE TO REPRESENT OR SPEAK FOR HIM BUT ME.

PRIOR TO PRESENTING THE FACTS, IT IS IMPORTANT TO PRESENT THE DIFFERENCES OF OPINION OF WHAT REALLY HAPPENED ON JULY 15, 1966. I HAVE ATTEMPTED TO GIVE BOTH VERSIONS AS ACCURATELY AS POSSIBLE AND FOLLOWED WITH MY REASONING AND DISAGREEMENT RESPONSE TO CIL-HI'S REPORT.

POSITION OF THE U. S. NAVY

THE U. S. NAVY DETERMINED THAT ON JULY 15, 1966, A NUMBER OF CHINOOK HELICOPTERS (THE NUMBER VARIES IN NUMEROUS REPORTS) SET DOWN AT DONG HA TO PICK UP A GROUP OF MARINES AND FLY THEM TO A LANDING ZONE IN QUANG TRI PROVINCE TO SUPPORT A GROUP OF MARINES ALREADY THERE WHO WERE SURROUNDED AND PINNED DOWN. AS THE HELICOPTER GROUP STARTED THEIR APPROACH TO THE LZ, A HELICOPTER (FIRST OR SECOND IN THE FORMATION) WAS HIT IN A FUEL CELL BY AN INCENDIARY SHELL. THE HELICOPTER CRASHED AND BURNED. THE PILOT, THOMAS MC ALLISTER, THE CO-PILOT, RICHEY, AND THE GUNNER, LUCAS, SURVIVED. THE REMAINDER OF THE PERSONNEL ON BOARD WERE KILLED IN THE CRASH (11 OF 13 IN VARIOUS REPORTS). THE REMAINING HELICOPTERS IN THE FLIGHT RETURNED TO DONG HA AND MUSTERED ON THE FIELD IMMEDIATELY AFTER LANDING. THE LIST OF THOSE KILLED IN ACTION WAS OBTAINED FROM THOSE MISSING THE MUSTER. ALL THE KILLED WERE "POSITIVELY" IDENTIFIED WITH THE EXCEPTION OF ONE CADAVRER AND ONLY MARK DENNIS REMAINED UNACCOUNTED FOR. THEREFORE, THE REMAINING CADAVRER WAS IDENTIFIED AS DENNIS.

POSITION OF JERRY DENNIS

SINCE NOVEMBER OF 1971, AS THE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE DENNIS FAMILY, I HAVE RECEIVED MANY INCIDENTS WHICH CONFLICT WITH THE ABOVE VERSION OF THE INCIDENT. IT IS MY OPINION, AS AN EXPERIENCED INVESTIGATOR, THAT THE FACTS PRESENT A TOTALLY DIFFERENT PICTURE. ON JULY 15, 1966 TEN (10) CHINOOK HELICOPTERS SET DOWN AT DONG HA AND ONE HUNDRED TWENTY (120) MARINES AND OTHER SUPPORT TROOPS WERE LOADED ON BOARD. NO ROSTER WAS TAKEN TO DETERMINE WHO OR HOW MANY WERE ON EACH AIRCRAFT. WHILE APPROACHING THE LZ, THE SECOND AIRCRAFT IN THE FORMATION WAS STRUCK BY ENEMY FIRE AND IMMEDIATELY DROPPED TO TREE-TOP LEVEL. WHILE HOVERING OVER A SANDY CREEK BED APPROXIMATELY 20 TO 30 FEET ABOVE THE GROUND, MEN BEGAN JUMPING OUT. THEY WOULD HAVE LANDED IN THE MIDST OF NORTH VIETNAMESE REGULARS. THE HELICOPTER THEN ROSE AND ATTEMPTED TO LAND AT THE LZ. IT HIT HARD ON A HILLSIDE, BURNED AND EXPLODED. THE REMAINING NINE AIRCRAFT HAD LEFT THE AREA DUE TO INTENSE GROUND FIRE PRIOR TO THE CRASH. THEY RETURNED TO DONG HA AND WERE IMMEDIATELY REDEPLOYED TO "MOTHER'S RIDGE" WITHOUT TAKING MUSTER.

LATER, WHEN THE INTENSE GROUND FIRE LET UP AND THE HELICOPTER HAD COOLED, THE REMAINS OF A NUMBER OF PERSONS WERE RECOVERED BUT THERE WERE NOT THIRTEEN. THE MARINES WAITED ONE WEEK AND WHEN NO ONE RETURNED, ALL THIRTEEN WERE LISTED KILLED. THE RECOVERED REMAINS WERE LATER PARTIALLY IDENTIFIED AND 'UNKNOWN' REMAINS WERE BLOWN UP AND SUBSTITUTED FOR THE MISSING. EVIDENCE WAS MANUFACTURED AND PLACED IN THE CABINET(S).

FACTS PRESENTED TO/USED BY CIL-HI

IN THE YEARS TO FOLLOW, ONE FALSE REPORT AFTER ANOTHER WAS FURNISHED TO ME TO COVER UP THE INCIDENT. WHEN CIL-HI WAS PRESENTED THE "BACKGROUND INFORMATION" ON THE INCIDENT AND MARK DENNIS' PHYSICAL CHARACTERISTICS, THEY WERE GIVEN MUCH OF THE 'MISINFORMATION' WHICH HAS BEEN GENERATED. IN ADDITION, WHILE CERTAIN FACTS WERE USED FROM OFFICIAL REPORTS (WHICH SUPPORTED THE IDENTIFICATION), OTHER FACTS IN THOSE SAME REPORTS (WHICH DISPUTED THE IDENTIFICATION) WERE WITHHELD FROM THE BACKGROUND INFORMATION USED BY CIL-HI INVESTIGATORS.

THE FACTS GENERATED BY CIL-HI AND OTHER GOVERNMENT EXPERTS SHOW BEYOND ANY REASONABLE DOUBT, WHEN COMPARED WITH THE RECORDS AND CORRECT PHYSICAL CHARACTERISTICS OF MARK DENNIS, THAT THE REMAINS IN QUESTION COULD NOT POSSIBLY BE THOSE OF DENNIS.

INCIDENT	PERSONNEL KILLED IN CH46 HELICOPTER CRASH. CH46 USES NON-LEADED KEROSENE; JP-4 OR JP-5.	LAB REPORTS SHOW BODY BLOWN UP WITH AMERICAN GRENADES AND BURNED WITH REGULAR GASOLINE.
ID TAGS	NAVY REPORTS NO ID TAGS WERE FOUND ON DENNIS IN THE RECOVERY PROCESS. NAVY STATES THEY HAVE NO IDEA HOW THE ID TAGS CAME TO BE PLACED IN THE CASKET OR WHERE THEY HAD COME FROM.	ID TAGS WERE FOUND IN THE CASKET PINNED TO THE BLANKET WRAPPED AROUND THE REMAINS. ID TAGS WERE BURNED BY SMOKE FROM PAPER AND NEVER EXCEEDED 250 DEG F. THE SIMULATED BURNING COULD HAVE BEEN ACCOMPLISHED BY SIMPLY HOLDING THE TAGS OVER BURNING PAPER.
SUPPLIES ABOARD	THE PILOT, THOMAS MC ALLISTER, STATES IN HIS AFFIDAVIT THAT NO CASES OF SUPPLIES WERE BEING CARRIED BY THE TROOPS BOARDING.	LAB REPORTS SHOW THAT BURNED PAPER IMBEDDED IN THE REMAINS IS THAT OF A PAPER USED ONLY IN THE PACKAGING OF AMUNITION AT THE FACTORY. A CASE OF GRENADES WOULD HAVE TO HAVE BEEN INVOLVED IN THE EXPLOSION WHICH DAMAGED THE REMAINS.

FACTS	NAVY	FAMILY
MURDER KILLED IN INCIDENT	ORIGINALLY IT WERE LISTED KILLED IN 1966. IN 1970 THE NAVY HAD STATED ONLY 11 WERE KILLED AND RECOVERED. THE 1981 NIS INQUEST DETERMINED ONLY 11 WERE KILLED AND RECOVERED. THE NAVY TODAY CLAIMS 13 WERE KILLED IN THE CRASH. THE 1971 INQUEST REPORT STATES ALL 13 DEATH CERTIFICATES WERE COMPALED WITH THE REMAINS. THIS WAS BEFORE THE 1970 STATEMENT THAT ONLY 11 WERE KILLED.	IT SEEMS THAT THE WERE RECOVERED AS A RESULT OF THE CRASH. CILMI WAS IDENTIFIED WITH RECORDS THAT ALL 13 REMAINS WERE RECOVERED FROM THE CRASH. EVEN THOUGH THE STATEMENT OF LUCAS THE GUNNER, WAS ALSO GIVEN TO THEM AND ONLY SEEMED TO TOTALLY IGNORE THE STATEMENT OF TWO OTHER EYE WITNESSES OF THE PASSENGERS ON BOARD THE AIRCRAFT. LUCAS STATES THAT AT LEAST TWO MEN HAD JUMPED BEFORE THE CRASH INTO ENEMY TERRITORY. IT IS APPARENT THAT AT LEAST TWO OF THE BODIES COULD NOT HAVE BEEN FOUND IN THE CRASH.
RECOVERY PROCESS	NAVY STATES ALL THE REMAINS WERE REMOVED FROM THE AIRCRAFT AT QUANG TRI; FLOWN TO DONG HAI; FLOWN TO DA NANG AND TENTATIVELY PROCESSED; FLOWN TO SAIGON; AND THEN FLOWN TO THE U.S.	STATEMENT OF MEDIC JOHN LAY SHOWS THE REMAINS OF AT LEAST TWO WERE FLOWN FROM DONG HAI TO PHU SAI AND TENTATIVELY PROCESSED THERE. HE WAS ASSIGNED TO DO THE INITIAL ID ON THE TWO MEDICS INVOLVED. HE WAS A CLOSE FRIEND OF DENNIS IN VIETNAM.
PROCESS OF ELIMINATION	THE NAVY NAMED N FORM ON DENNIS STATES THAT COMPLETE IDENTIFICATION WAS MADE ON ALL OF THE OTHER DECEASED WITH ONLY DENNIS REMAINING ID WAS ESTABLISHED IN THAT MANNER.	THE NAMED N FORM ON DENNIS WAS COMPLETED BEFORE SIX (6) OF THE OTHER DECEASED WERE IDENTIFIED. CULLEN'S WAS NOT COMPLETED UNTIL 19 DAYS AFTER DENNIS. THE DENNIS' FAMILY WAS NOTIFIED OF THE DEATH THREE DAYS BEFORE THE COMPLETION OF THE ID.

MAJOR FACTS IN DISPUTE

FACTS	Maple	Charney
AGE OF REMAINS	MAPLES = 24 - 24 HINKES = 20.4 - 29.0 ANGEL = 20 - 21 CHARNEY = 24 - 26 22 - 24 22-29 RIPKEY = 24.4 - 29.0	STANDARDS ARE SET IN FORENSIC MEDICINE TO ALLOW FOR VARIANCES IN AGE AS WE DO NOT ALL PHYSICALLY MATURE AT THE SAME RATE. THOSE VARIANCES ARE THE EXTREMES. DENNIS WAS 19.8 YEARS OLD. IN EACH CASE THE GOVERNMENT EXPERTS CAME UP WITH AN AGE OUTSIDE THE EXTREMES BUT THEN DETERMINED IT WAS CLOSE ENOUGH FOR DENNIS. YOU DO NOT USE KNOWN VARIANCES AND THEN ADD TO IT!

CAUCASIAN VS MONSOLOID

IN A MEETING BETWEEN DR. MAPLES, JOHN ROBERTS, DR. CHARNEY AND MYSELF IN NOVEMBER OF 1989. BOTH DR. MAPLES AND DR. CHARNEY AGREED THAT, ALTHOUGH BOTH HAD DIFFERING OPINIONS ON RACE, NEITHER HAD ENOUGH EVIDENCE FROM THE REMAINS TO BE ABSOLUTELY POSITIVE IN THEIR OPINION. THEREFORE, BOTH AGREED THE ARGUMENT WOULD NOT BE DISCUSSED FURTHER AT THE MEETING. I ONLY BRING UP THE POINT AS THE QUESTION ARISES AS TO WHERE THESE REMAINS COULD HAVE COME FROM.

TEETH

DR. MAPLES AND DR. CHARNEY AGREED AT THE ABOVE MEETING THAT THE TEETH NEITHER PROVE NOR DISPROVE THE IDENTIFICATION. ANY FURTHER RESEARCH IN THIS AREA WOULD BE FRUITLESS AS THE FILLED TOOTH HAS NOW BEEN DESTROYED BY CILHI.

FORMAT OF THIS REPORT

IN AS MUCH AS I AM A LAYMAN IN PRODUCING A REPORT SUCH AS THIS, I HAVE ATTEMPTED TO PRESENT THE EVIDENCE IN SUCH A WAY THAT IT WILL BE AS EASY AS POSSIBLE FOR THE READER TO UNDERSTAND QUOTES AND THE REFERENCES FROM WHICH THEY ARE TAKEN. IT IS ALSO LIKELY THAT I HAVE REFERRED TO A REPORT CONSISTING OF A NUMBER OF DOCUMENTS THAT MAY NOT BE IN THE SAME SEQUENCE AS THE SAME DOCUMENTS PRESENTED BY OTHER SOURCES. THIS RESPONSE IS NUMBERED IN THE CENTER OF EACH PAGE, THE NUMBERING OF PAGES FOR A SPECIFIC REPORT ARE DONE ON THE LOWER RIGHT OF EACH PAGE, SUCH AS PAGE 1 of 3. THE ADDENDUMS ARE NUMBERED ON THE UPPER RIGHT OF EACH PAGE AND ARE PRECEDED BY AN 'A', SUCH AS A-B7.

Quotes are presented in this way. References are given for quotes, such as (see SECNAV Ltr dtd 01-07-88, page A-B7).

THIS RESPONSE TO CIL-HI REPORT 0055-88 IS INTENDED TO DEAL ONLY WITH THE IDENTIFICATION INFORMATION AS TO WHETHER MARK DENNIS IS ALIVE TODAY OR WAS, AT SOME DETERMINED POINT IN TIME. HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH THESE IDENTIFICATION PROCEDURES AND IS THEREFORE, OMITTED.

THIS RESPONSE WAS PRODUCED BY RESPONDING TO ITEMS WITHIN THE CIL-HI AND OTHER INDEPENDENT AND GOVERNMENT REPORTS. SINCE MORE THAN ONE PERSON MAY HAVE USED THE SAME INFORMATION IN FORMULATING THAT REPORT, THERE IS A DUPLICATION WHICH CANNOT BE HELPED. I HAVE ATTEMPTED TO GROUP THOSE QUOTES TOGETHER WITH ONE RESPONSE WHERE POSSIBLE.

AFTER RESPONDING TO CIL-HI 0055-88, I HAVE RESPONDED TO OTHER DOCUMENTS PROVIDED BY THE NAVY OVER THE YEARS. AGAIN, THERE IS SOME DUPLICATION BECAUSE CIL-HI USED ONLY PARTS OF THE OTHER DOCUMENTS AND A RESPONSE IS NECESSARY ON THE REMAINDER OF THE DOCUMENT(S). PERSONAL CONVERSATIONS ARE KEPT AT A MINIMUM EXCEPT WHERE THEY HAVE BEEN DOCUMENTED BY THE NAVY OR CIL-HI PERSONNEL (MOST OF WHICH ARE INCORRECTLY STATED).

AFTER COMPLETING THE ABOVE RESPONSE, I HAVE COMPLETED A SUMMARY WHICH IS MY OPINION OF THE CIRCUMSTANCES BASED ON THE FACTS PROVIDED IN THIS RESPONSE.

I THEN 'HIGH-LIGHTED' THE PARAGRAPHS AND STATEMENTS I HAVE QUOTED AND/OR DISPUTED IN THE RESPONSE. WHEN THE READER LOOKS AT THE DISPUTED AREAS WHICH ARE MARKED, IT IS EASY TO UNDERSTAND WHY I CANNOT ACCEPT THE IDENTIFICATION OF THE REMAINS AS THOSE OF MARK V. DENNIS.

DESTRUCTION OF EVIDENCE

TWO ITEMS OF EVIDENCE CONSISTING OF REMAINS IN THE CASSET RECEIVED BY THE FAMILY IN 1981 HAVE BEEN THE MAJOR POINT OF DISPUTE IN THE IDENTIFICATION.

FIRST, A TOOTH WITH TWO FILLINGS REMAINED IN THE SKULL. TWO OTHER IMPACTED TEETH WERE ALSO PRESENT WHICH WERE LESS OF A DISPUTE. THE CIL-HI LAB, ALONG WITH THE LIFE CODES CORPORATION, CHOSE TO DESTROY THE FILLED TOOTH TO OBTAIN PULP FOR DNA TESTS. THE TWO COMPLETE IMPACTED TEETH WERE MORE LIKELY TO PRODUCE THE NEEDED MATERIAL AS THEY WERE NOT PREVIOUSLY DRILLED OUT. INSTEAD, THE ONE TOOTH IN DISPUTE WAS DESTROYED.

SECONDLY, THE LEFT FEMUR WAS BROKEN TOTALLY INTO TWO PIECES. ONE END OF THE FEMUR HAD BEEN BURNED BUT NOT THE COMPLETE SURFACE. BY PLACING THE TWO PIECES TOGETHER, A PERFECT FIT WAS AVAILABLE TO GET A COMPLETE MEASUREMENT. AGAIN, CIL-HI, ALONG WITH LIFE CODES CORPORATION, CHOSE TO DESTROY THAT PIECE OF EVIDENCE BY CUTTING A SECTION OUT OF THE BONE, AS NOTED BY DR. MAPLES. THE SECTION WAS THEN NEVER USED, THAT BONE MAY NOW NEVER BE MEASURED WITH THE ACCURACY IT ONCE WAS. MANY OTHER BONES WERE AVAILABLE FROM THE REMAINS.

ALTHOUGH THE REMAINS WERE RECEIVED BY CILHI ON 1 APRIL 1988 (PAGE 26 OF 121A-079) AND THE LEFT FEMUR WAS NOT SECTIONED UNTIL 11 MAY 1988, CILHI DID NOT SEE FIT TO MEASURE THE LEFT FEMUR BEFORE IT WAS SECTIONED BY LIFE CODES.

THE ABOVE ACTS WERE EITHER LACK OF EXPERT CAPABILITY, STUPIDITY, OR AN INTENTIONAL ACT OF DESTRUCTION OF EVIDENCE. AFTER READING THE REMAINDER OF THIS RESPONSE, YOU BE THE JUDGE.

MISSING RECORDS AND FILES

THROUGHOUT THIS RESPONSE I HAVE ADDRESSED NUMEROUS REPORTS WHICH WERE USED BY THE USN OVER THE YEARS, TO DOCUMENT STATEMENTS IN CORRESPONDENCE, WHICH NOW DO NOT EXIST AND NEVER DID EXIST ACCORDING TO PERSONNEL AT NMPC. IN ADDITION, THE ENTIRE ORIGINAL FILE ON MARK DENNIS WAS REMOVED FROM THE ST. LOUIS ARCHIVES IN DECEMBER OF 1982 AND NEVER RETURNED UNTIL IT MYSTERIOUSLY ARRIVED IN THE MAIL IN ST. LOUIS IN DECEMBER OF 1987. NO ONE SEEMS TO KNOW BY WHO OR WHY THE RECORDS WERE REMOVED EXCEPT THAT IT WAS SOMEONE WITHIN NMPC. NO REQUESTS WERE PENDING EITHER FROM MYSELF OR MY CONGRESSIONAL REPRESENTATIVE AT THE TIME THE FILES WERE REMOVED. WHEN I REVIEWED MARK'S RECORDS IN THE PRESENCE OF MR. JOHN ROGERS IN NOVEMBER OF 1988, I FURNISHED HIM MANY COPIES OF PRIOR CORRESPONDENCE FROM THE NAVY WHICH WERE MISSING FROM THE FILE. THE FILES, EITHER THROUGH DESIGN OR NEGLIGENCE, HAD BEEN PURGED. NMPC ASSUMES SOME STATEMENTS MADE BY THE NAVY IN THE PAST WERE BASED ON 'MISINFORMATION' AND NOT FACTS SINCE NO RECORDS CAN BE FOUND TODAY TO SUPPORT SUCH STATEMENTS. THE QUESTION REMAINS: "WHY WAS SUCH 'MISINFORMATION' PRESENTED TO AND USED BY CILHI?"

SINCE I NUMBERED THE PAGES IN THE CILHI REPORT IN THE SEQUENCE I RECEIVED THEM, THE NUMBERING OF THE 121 PAGES ARE NOT IN DATE SEQUENCE.

RECORD DATA: Deceased and Missing Personnel

PAGE 35 GIVES A HEIGHT OF 67 1/4" AND BROWN EYES. BOTH WERE OBTAINED FROM THE FORM 88, REPORT OF MEDICAL EXAMINATION (PAGES 58, 59 OF 121; A-111, 112) AND BOTH ARE WRONG. MARK HAD BLUE EYES AND WAS IN EXCESS OF 6' TALL. WHERE THE INFORMATION CAME FROM OR WHO IT PERTAINS TO IS A MYSTERY, BUT IT IS NOT CORRECT FOR DENNIS YET WAS USED IN EVERY COMPARISON OF HEIGHT IN THE CILHI REPORT.

THE HEIGHT OF MARK DENNIS IS THE MOST DISPUTED INFORMATION IN THE RECORDS AND REPORTS PRODUCED BY THE NAVY AND CILHI SINCE THE 1966 INCIDENT. THE CILHI REPORT DISAGREES WITH THE NAVY AND THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE REPORT BY DR. LAWRENCE ANGEL COMPLETED IN 1971. THE NIS INVESTIGATION COMPLETED IN 1981 DISAGREES WITH ALL THE OTHER REPORTS. THE HEIGHT DISCREPANCIES ARE PARTIALLY AS FOLLOWS:

1. SP88 DATED 2/4/64 LISTS A HEIGHT OF 67 1/4" OF 69 1/4". THE PEN APPEARS TO HAVE 'SKIPPED' WHEN WRITING 69 1/4 MAKING IT APPEAR AS 67 1/4. A SECOND POSSIBILITY IS THAT THE INFORMATION IS ON SOMEONE OTHER THAN DENNIS AS THE EYES ARE LISTED AS BROWN RATHER THAN BLUE AND THE BUILD IS LISTED AS MEDIUM RATHER THAN SLENDER. (PAGE 59 OF 121; A-112)

2. THE FAMILY DOCTOR'S RECORDS SHOW MARK DENNIS' HEIGHT AT 5'9 1/2" ON 9/19/63 AT THE AGE OF 17. (A-273)

3. THE MIAMISBURG HIGH SCHOOL FOOTBALL ROSTER FOR THE 63-64 SCHOOL YEAR LISTS DENNIS AS 5'10". THAT MEASUREMENT WAS ALSO AT THE AGE OF 17 AND TAKEN A MONTH OR TWO AFTER THE ABOVE DOCTOR'S MEASUREMENT. THE 1/2" DIFFERENCE IN THE TWO SIMPLY SHOW DENNIS WAS GROWING. (A-029)

4. THE 5 AUG 71 REPORT BY ROBERT W. RALSTON, IDENTIFICATION SPECIALIST, WRIGHT-PATTERSON AIR FORCE BASE, STATES

This height measurement is comparable with that of Dennis at time of death applying the Mildred Trotter-Goldine C. Gleason Scale (re: Estimates of Stature from Maximum Lengths of the Sum of Measurements of Long Bones, 1956). The scale allows for an anticipated growth of 1.2 cm in American males from age 17 to 19.5 years. The recorded height of Dennis, 4 Feb 64, was 67 1/4" (45.4 cm). Since death occurred 15 July 66 or about 2 1/2 years after the 4 Feb 64 measurement, the height of 68.6" (46.8 cm) is established.

14. THE 67 1/4" HEIGHT OF THE FOOTBALL MEASUREMENT LISTED IN THE ABOVE FORMULA, THE HEIGHT OF 3' 11 1/4" IS ESTABLISHED FOR DENNIS. THIS IS WITHIN LINE OF THE ESTIMATED HEIGHT OF THE FAMILY AND FRIENDS (PAGES A-248 THROUGH A-273); THE NIS STATEMENT (A-200) AND THE PHOTOGRAPHIC EVALUATION OF THE COLORADO STATE UNIVERSITY (PAGES A-041 THROUGH A-047).

5. THE NIS INVESTIGATION REPORT DATED 1981 STATES

Subject was a Caucasian 70" tall (THIS IS MADE AS A STATEMENT OF FACT).

IN ADDITION, THE REPORT STATES

....wherein height was estimated at 69.... (PAGE 84 OF 121; A-139).

6. THE REPORT OF DR. MICHAEL CHARNEY, DATED 29 JULY 1989, STATES

Mark must have been 6 feet tall or within a half inch of that height. (A-042)

DR. CHARNEY MADE THAT STATEMENT AFTER REVIEWING THE MANY PHOTOGRAPHS OF FAMILY MEMBERS WITH MARK. THE HEIGHT OF THE OTHER FAMILY MEMBERS IS NOT ONLY KNOWN. DR. CHARNEY HAS PERSONALLY MET MOST OF THEM PRIOR TO COMPLETING HIS REPORT.

7. CILHI CHOSE TO IGNORE ALL THE ABOVE AND DETERMINE THAT THE 67 1/4" HEIGHT COULD NOT BE A MISTAKE AND, FURTHER, THAT MARK DENNIS DID NOT GROW IN HEIGHT FROM AGE 17 YEARS, 4 MONTHS TO 19 YEARS, 10 MONTHS.

SUMMARY OF INCIDENT

ANOTHER 'MISINFORMATION' QUOTED IS CONTAINED IN THE "SUMMARY OF INCIDENT" WHICH STATES

....but ultimately all remains were recovered (from the crash).... (PAGE 40 OF 121; A-093)

IT WAS IMPOSSIBLE TO REMOVE THIRTEEN (13) REMAINS FROM THE CRASH WHEN AT LEAST TWO (2) HAD JUMPED IN ENEMY TERRITORY PRIOR TO THE CRASH. THE GUNNER, GARY ALAN LUCAS, WAS INTERVIEWED BY NIS ON 2 OCTOBER 1981 AND STATED

I saw an individual run off the aft ramp of the helicopter and his clothing was smoking.... I saw a second man jump from the aircraft.... (PAGE 107 OF 121; A-156)

ALTHOUGH LUCAS THOUGHT THE AIRCRAFT WAS STILL AT 1200 FEET, HE WOULD HAVE HAD DIFFICULTY SEEING AS THE PILOT STATED THE AIRCRAFT WAS FULL OF SMOKE AND NO ONE COULD SEE TO LAND THE HELICOPTER. THE PILOT, MC CALLISTER, ALSO STATED HE "DROPPED LIKE A ROCK" WHEN FIRST HIT AND RUBBED THE TREETOPS. NIS ALSO INTERVIEWED MARVIN A. WEENICK, A WITNESS ON THE GROUND, AND

CERTIFICATE OF DEATH, NAVMED N
#685 11, 30 OF 1211 A-112.119

MANY QUESTIONS REMAIN ON THE INFORMATION IN THIS DOCUMENT. TIME OF DEATH ORIGINALLY WAS LISTED AS 17 JULY 1966 FOR THE REMAINS IN QUESTION; THE "HEIGHT" IS LISTED AS 5' 11" WHEN MARK WAS OVER 72"; THE "DATE BORNED" IS LISTED AS 25 JULY 1944 WHEN THE FAMILY HAD ALREADY BEEN NOTIFIED ON 22 JULY 1965 OF HIS "DEATH" ON 13 JULY 1964.

THE MOST UNCONVINCING STATEMENT IS THE "SUMMARY OF FACTS RELATING TO DEATH" WHICH STATES:

Identification was established by a thorough check with all units concerned in regards to the actual passengers aboard the aircraft. Complete identification was made on all of the other deceased with only DENNIS remaining and one cadaver. Identity was established in that manner.

F0RENSIC CONSULTANTS

THE MAJOR QUESTION WERE TO HOW CILHI ELIMINATED THE FACTS WHO MOST COMPLETE INFORMATION AVAILABLE. THE STATEMENT OF THE F0RENSIC ODONTOLOGY REPORT: CILHI 0055-88, THE INVESTIGATION OF THE TEETH AND WERE IN THE HANDS OF CILHI. THE FIRST AS TAKEN IN JANUARY 1964 JUST PRIOR TO THE EXTRACTION OF TEETH. THE SECOND WAS TAKEN ON 2/24/65 (PAGE 17 OF 101, NAVMED N. # 010).

WHEN FURTHER QUESTIONS AROSE DUE TO THE FACTS WHO STATEMENT OF THE POSTMORTEM X-RAY. THESE QUESTIONS WERE ANSWERED BY DR. ELLIS REELEY, BY PHONE ON MAY 10, 1968. ONE OF THE QUESTIONS WAS: Are there any more impressions and postmortem teeth available for comparison (PAGE 9 OF 1211 A-062)?

THE 2/24/65 POSTMORTEM X-RAY WAS NOT PROVIDED TO THE F0RENSIC ODONTOLOGIST. BETTER YET, WHY WAS THE ENTIRE SMALL MOUTH TEETH PRESENT NOT SENT TO THE F0RENSIC SPECIALISTS?

THE BOTTOM LINE OF THE REPORT IS WELL STATED:

There are no areas of individuality present that would allow this fragment to be positively identified based upon X-ray comparison only. (PAGE 9 OF 1211 A-062)

AN ADDITIONAL LETTER OF CORRESPONDENCE WAS SUBMITTED TO MR. JOHN ROGERS FROM DR. EBERT DATED DECEMBER 16, 1968. THE LETTER STATES, IN PART:

I do think we would like to do some more work with the radiographs. If Bill Macle's can get some on the reconstructed teeth. The slightly different angles between the ante- and the original postmortem radiographs is quite noticeable. (UNDERLINE MINE) (SEE PAGE A-106)

THIS DOES NOT SOUND LIKE A POSITIVE ATTITUDE TOWARD IDENTIFICATION FROM AN EXPERT.

BRIGON C. SMITH, MAJ, DE USA
(PAGES 12 THROUGH 19 OF 1211A-062 THROUGH A-072)

THE CONCLUSIONS, SUCH AS, MARKEDLY SIMILAR, NO IRRESOLVABLE DISCREPANCIES AND IS NOT INCONSISTENT WITH DO NOT MAKE AN IDENTIFICATION.

THE INTERESTING STATEMENTS MADE BY SMITH AGREE WITH MY STATEMENTS MADE ABOVE WHEN HE SAYS:

RECORD OF IDENTIFICATION PROCESSING

MADELINE J. HINES
(PAGES 20 THROUGH 23 OF 124; A-071 THROUGH A-074)

MS. WINKLES SHOWS THE MAJOR PORTION OF THE LEFT FEMUR MISSING ON HER CHARTING OF THE REMAINS. YET REFERS TO THE PORTION ON PAGE 21 AS THE "anterior left femur has been longitudinally sectioned, from the lesser trochanter through the distal tubercle". IN ADDITION, ALL OTHER REPORTS REFER TO THE LENGTH OF THE LEFT FEMUR, WHICH WAS IN TWO PIECES BEFORE CILMI CUT A SECTION OUT, BUT THE PIECES FIT TOGETHER TO FORM A COMPLETE BONE.. DR. CHARNEY MEASURED THE COMPLETE LENGTH AT 45.3 CM. AND DR. MAPLES STATES "I repeatedly obtained a measurement of 45.3 cm for the maximum length of this left femur (case 0055-28 case reviewed by Dr. Maples, page 2 of 3, paragraph 4, (4-17-77))".

MS HINKER THEN MEASURED THE LENGTH OF SEGMENT 1 OF THE RIGHT FEMUR. AS STATED ON PAGE 21 OF 121, WHY WAS A SMALL PORTION OF THE RIGHT FEMUR MEASURED WHEN A COMPLETE LEFT FEMUR WAS AVAILABLE? EVEN AFTER THE LEFT FEMUR WAS SECTIONED FOR DNA TESTS BY LIFE CODES. THE REMAINING SECTION WAS MUCH LARGER THAN THE RIGHT FEMUR SECTION USED. THE DIFFERENCE IN MEASURING THE SEGMENT 1 AND THE ENTIRE FEMUR IS THE PLUS OR MINUS FACTOR OF ERROR. MS HINKER USED SEGMENT 1 WHICH GIVES A PLUS OR MINUS FACTOR OF 1.3". IN OTHER WORDS, THE REMAINS CAN BE FROM 67.0" TO 70.3". THAT RANGE COVERS MOST OF OUR BECHTOLDMEN. THE PLUS OR MINUS FACTOR OF THE ENTIRE FEMUR MEASUREMENT IS 1.3". IN OTHER WORDS, DR. CHARNEY AND DR. MAPLES PUT THE REMAINS AT 65.3" TO 67.9". AGAIN, MARK BECHTOLD IS 70" TALL.

MS HINKER ESTIMATED THE AGE AT 24.7 YEARS PLUS OR MINUS 0.7 YEARS. THIS GIVES AN AGE BETWEEN 20.4 AND 25. MARK WAS 19.8 YEARS

NO OTHERS LISTED THE REMAINS OF BARRY FORD AND BRADLEY
STANLEY. FORD WAS TWIN.

USING THE EXTREMES OF MR. WINKER'S ESTIMATES, THE REMAINS ARE

REGARDS THE MOST TRUTHFUL STATEMENT MADE BY MS. WINNIE IS
"though nothing is definite."

STAFF REVIEW SUMMARY

PAGES 24 THROUGH 38 OF 121; D-277 THROUGH A-121

THE REPORT IS NOT POSITIVE WITH STATEMENTS SUCH AS "falsely...concluded"; "none consistent with"; AND "nothing...that would preclude"; AS DOCUMENTED EARLIER. THE BIOLOGICAL DETERMINATIONS WERE NOT CONSISTENT WITH THE PHYSICAL DESCRIPTIONS OF WHO DENNIS!

THE "STATEMENT OF IDENTIFICATION", BEGINNING ON PAGE 26 OF 101, IS FILLED WITH ERRONEOUS STATEMENTS. THE "BACKGROUND" STATES
..... of 15 casualties of a 15 July 1966 helicopter evacuation....

AS DOCUMENTED EARLIER, PERSONS JUMPED PRIOR TO THE CRASH AND COULD NOT HAVE BEEN ABOARD (SEE LUCAS, PAGE A-154).

AGAIN. THE BIOLOGICAL INFORMATION USED FOR DENNIS WAS ERRONEOUS.

THE CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE IS SPORADIC. THERE WAS NO COMPANY MUSTER IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE ACCIDENT. THE INCLUSION OF ".....witness statements. leaves no doubt that MARK V. DENNIS was aboard the helicopter when it crashed." IS IN DIRECT CONTRADICTION TO THE EYE WITNESS REPORT OF LUCAS (A-136). IN FACT, THE REMAINS IN QUESTION DID NOT COME FROM THE HELICOPTER WHICH CRASHED, WHICH IS DISCUSSED ELSEWHERE IN THIS RESPONSE.

DENTAL REPORT

DR. LOWELL J. LEVINE, D.O.S.
PAGES 29, 30 OF 121 A-082, A-083

DR. LEVINE'S REPORT APPEARS TO BE MORE OF A REVIEW OF OTHER PEOPLE'S REPORTS. EACH OF THE OTHER REPORTS IS ADDRESSED HEREIN. THEREFOR, I HAVE ADDRESSED THEIR REPORTS SEPARATELY.

ONE THING IS OF IMPORTANCE IN THIS REPORT. DR. LEVINE STATES
I HAVE CONSIDERED THE CIRCUMSTANCES....
THESE "CIRCUMSTANCES" ARE QUESTIONED THROUGHOUT THIS ENTIRE RESPONSE.

FORENSIC REPORT

DR. WALTER H. BIRKBY

AGREED. DR. CHAPNEY'S LENGTH OF THE LEFT FEMUR READ 44.3 CM.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD. SUBJECT: MARK V. DENNIS, DECEASED. REPORT OF DR. RALSTON, ID SPECIALIST, CONCERNING THE PHYSICAL IDENTIFICATION OF MARK DENNIS WITH THE REMAINS. AS DID ALL CILHI EXPERTS.

1971 WPAFB/SMITHSONIAN REPORT

VOESLER-TABBITAND

THE REPORT SAYS IT ALL:

We cannot say that this skull was not that of Mark V. Dennis. THEN FOLLOW BY STATING We can say this skull could be that of Mark V. Dennis....

DR. J. LAWRENCE ANGEL

IT IS DIFFICULT TO UNDERSTAND WHY DR. ANGEL STATES A ...Humerus length over 32 cm suggests... WHEN ALL OTHER PARTIES AGREE THE HUMERUS IS NOT WHOLE AND PARTS ARE BURNED AWAY (PAGE 20 OF 121; A-073).

THE FEMUR LENGTH IS QUITE VARIABLE. DR. ANGEL STATES Approximate femur length of 46-47 cm.... HE DOES GIVE A STATURE BETWEEN 5'7" AND 5'8" WHICH IS TOO SHORT FOR A PERSON 6' TALL.

ANOTHER IMPORTANT STATEMENT BY DR. ANGEL, WHO WAS CONSIDERED BY MOST TO BE THE TOP EXPERT IN HIS FIELD, IS THE STATEMENT Through the dental X-rays taken in life and insufficient to reveal identity by comparison... (PAGE 68 OF 121; A-141)

ROBERT W. RALSTON, ID SPECIALIST

ON PAGE 84 OF 121. MR. RALSTON ESTIMATED THE HEIGHT OF MARK DENNIS AT 69" WITH A FEMUR LENGTH OF 41.8 cm. EVEN THOUGH HE STARTED WITH 67 1/4" IN HIS CALCULATIONS RATHER THAN THE 69 1/2" TO 70" MARK WAS AT AGE 17. THE HEIGHT ESTIMATE AND FEMUR LENGTH CALLED OUT JUST DO NOT MATCH THE REMAINS IN QUESTION. AT LEAST HE GAVE MARK AN ESTIMATED GROWTH FROM 17 TO 20 WHICH ALL CILHI EXPERTS IGNORED. ALTHOUGH HINKES STATES MARK WOULD HAVE GROWN. HAD RALSTON USED 70" IN HIS CALCULATIONS, WHICH MARK MEASURED IN HIS LAST YEAR OF HIGH SCHOOL. THE ESTIMATED HEIGHT FOR MARK WOULD BE 71 3/4". WITHIN 1/4" OF DR. CHARNEY'S ESTIMATE.

PROBABLY THE MOST IMPORTANT STATEMENTS MADE BY RALSTON ARE HIS SUMMARY. HE HAS COMPARED ALL STATISTICAL DATA ON THE 13 PERSONS BECOMING RECOVERED. 13 WERE NOT ABOARD AT THE TIME OF THE CRASH AS DOCUMENTED EARLIER IN THIS RESPONSE. IT IS INTERESTING TO NOTE THAT HE IMPLIES THIS WAS NECESSARY, WHICH ALSO IMPLIES HE WAS NOT POSITIVE OF THE IDENTIFICATION.

JOINT MESSAGE DTD 07 MAY 77

THIS MESSAGE IS IN REPLY TO A REQUEST FOR NEW INFORMATION ON THE CRASH. AS THE MESSAGE STATES. Results provide all info concerning loss of aircraft. THE ENTIRE CILHI REPORT IS BASED ON INFORMATION THAT A MUSTER WAS TAKEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER WHILE OTHER AIRCRAFT RETURNED TO THE POINT OF ORIGIN. IN SUCH INFORMATION WAS NOT AVAILABLE IN 1971 CIL FILE. WHERE DID IT MAGICALLY APPEAR FROM?

NIS INVEST OF 1981

PAGES 85 THROUGH 104 OF 121; A-148 THROUGH A-157

ALTHOUGH THE ENTIRE NIS INVESTIGATION IS CALLED OUT EARLIER IN THIS RESPONSE. IT IS OF IMPORTANCE TO NOTE THAT THE RESULTS OF THE INVESTIGATION AND STATEMENTS OF PERSONS SURVIVING THE CRASH WERE FURNISHED TO CILHI AND BECAME A PORTION OF THEIR REPORT. IT IS EVIDENT THE INFORMATION WAS TOTALLY IGNORED.

DR. MICHAEL CHARNEY REPORT, 16 FEB 88

PAGES 105 THROUGH 110 OF 121; A-161 THROUGH A-168

ALTHOUGH THERE ARE ERRORS IN THE CALCULATIONS OF HEIGHT OF THE REMAINS ON THIS ORIGINAL REPORT. THE HEIGHT OF MARK DENNIS WAS DOCUMENTED AS 5'10" IN THE MIAMISBURG, OHIO HIGH SCHOOL FOOTBALL ROSTER SUBMITTED BY CHARNEY. THAT HEIGHT WAS ALSO TOTALLY IGNORED BY CILHI.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS IN CASE OF MARK V. DENNIS, DECEASED (UNDATED AND UNSIGNED)

THIS APPEARS TO BE A PROPAGANDA RELEASE OF PRIOR U. S. NAVY CHIEF OF DECEDENT AFFAIRS. FRANK ESKRIDGE. IT ALSO APPEARS TO BE THE SOURCE OF MANY STATEMENTS DOCUMENTED ON THE BACKGROUND OF THIS CASE. ALTHOUGH NO EVIDENCE HAS EVER BEEN OBTAINED THROUGH THE 'FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT' TO SUPPORT THIS DOCUMENT. IN FACT, MUCH OF THE INFORMATION I HAVE OBTAINED DISPUTES STATEMENTS MADE IN THIS DOCUMENT. THIS 'SUMMARY' WAS SUBMITTED TO AND USED BY CILHI. IT HAD PREVIOUSLY BEEN SUBMITTED TO NIS AND APPARENTLY WAS USED AS SOURCE INFORMATION BY THEM IN 1981. IT IS NO WONDER THAT THIS CASE HAS BEEN SO 'BOTCHED' WHEN EACH REVIEW IS SUBMITTED THE SAME 'MISINFORMATION'!

THE 'SUMMARY' STATES ...but ultimately all remains were recovered. (PAGE 111 OF 121; A-164) THAT STATEMENT IS IN CONTRADICTION TO THE STATEMENT OF THE GUNNER, LUCUS, WHO STATED AT LEAST TWO PERSONS RYED IN ENEMY TERRITORY PRIOR TO THE CRASH. (PAGE 102 OF 121; A-155) THIS SUMMARY STATES ...helicopters provided... (PAGE 111 OF 121; A-164). THE 1981 NIS REPORT STATES ...an entire USMC helicopter airlift was being

SECNAV LETTER DTD MARCH 15, 1972

(A-251 THROUGH A-257)

FOR THE FIRST TIME, DISCREPANCIES ARE LISTED. SECNAV, A NAVY LAB INVESTIGATION DETERMINED SEVERAL FACTS WERE INVOLVED IN THE CRASH. SECNAV ADMITTED MARY'S MEDICAL RECORD IS EQUIVOCAL AS TO WHETHER HIS HEIGHT IN FEBRUARY 1964, WHEN HE WAS SOME 17 AND YEARS OF AGE, WAS 67 1/4 INCHES OR 68 1/4 INCHES. SECNAV ADMITTED THAT NO RECOGNIZABLE IDENTIFICATION TAG FOR MARK WAS FOUND IN DIRECT ASSOCIATION WITH THE BODY RECOVERED FROM THE HELICOPTER WRECKAGE. SECNAV ACKNOWLEDGES NO EXPLANATION EXISTS FOR A SECTION OF ALUMINUM TUBING FOUND IN THE CABINET.

PAGE TWO STATES IT LANDED WITHIN 100 YARDS OF ITS INTENDED LANDING POINT. IT WAS WITHIN THE PERIMETER OF FRIENDLY FORCES. NIS INTERVIEWED NEENICK WHO STATED THE AIRCRAFT CRASHED AT THE PERIMETER AND PERSONS EXITING ONE DIRECTION WOULD HAVE COME TO FRIENDLY FORCES; PERSONS EXITING THE OTHER DIRECTION WOULD HAVE ENTERED ENEMY TERRITORY.

SECNAV STATES NO ONE ON BOARD THE HELICOPTER LEFT PRIOR TO THE TIME IT TOUCHED THE GROUND. (A-254) ON 10-02-61, NIS OBTAINED A STATEMENT FROM THE SURVIVOR, LUCUS, THAT PERSONS HAD LEFT IT PRIOR TO THE CRASH. (A-208 TO 210)

SECNAV LETTER DTD JULY 24, 1972

(A-255 THROUGH A-259)

THIS ENTIRE LETTER IS BASED ON INFORMATION SUPPOSEDLY RECEIVED FROM MAJOR ROBERT A. LARSEN. THE ONLY INFORMATION RECEIVED FROM MAJOR LARSEN PRIOR TO THIS LETTER IS CALLED OUT ON PAGE 2-251. THE DISCREPANCIES ARE:

1. NO STATEMENT WAS MADE BY LARSEN THAT MARK WAS PRESENT AT MORNING MUSTER OF E COMPANY ON JULY 15, 1966. IN FACT, MAJOR LARSEN FURTHER ADVISED HE DID NOT RECALL KNOWING MARK PERSONALLY OR HIS WHEREABOUTS ON 15 JULY.

2. MAJOR LARSEN MADE NONE OF THE OTHER STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO HIM.

3. WHEN I SPOKE TO MAJOR LARSEN, RETIRED, AT HIS HOME IN CALIFORNIA IN 1990, HE STATED HE COULD NOT FIND OUT WHO OR HOW MANY WERE KILLED IN THE CRASH FOR THREE DAYS AFTER THE CRASH. HE FURTHER STATED NO MUSTER WAS TAKEN ON THE FIELD WHEN THEY RETURNED TO DONG HA. RATHER, THE GROUP WAS SENT IMMEDIATELY INTO COMBAT AT MOTHER'S RIDGE.

SECNAV DOES STATE THEREFORE, IT SEEMS TO ME THAT EVEN ASSUMING THAT MARK WAS 69 INCHES UPON ENLISTMENT, AS SEEMS LIKELY.....

IN THE SECNAV LETTER OF MARCH 15, 1972 (A-252 - A-254), IT STATES IT SEEMS CERTAIN THAT NO RECOGNIZABLE IDENTIFICATION TAG FOR MARK WAS FOUND. THE SECNAV LETTER OF JULY 24 (A-255 - A-259), 1972 ATTEMPTS TO JUSTIFY THE LAP ANALYSIS ON THE TAGS AND EXPLAINS THAT THEY MAY HAVE BEEN FOUND IN THE CRASH. THE NAMED IN FORMS ON THE VICTIMS SHOWS SOME IDs WERE MADE ONLY ON THE BASIS OF DOG TAGS FOUND. (A-001 THROUGH A-025)

THE LETTER GIVES AN FBI OPINION ON NORMAL LEAD LEVELS IN BONE (A257) WHEN THE LAP ANALYSIS DONE BY PAPUCCI LABS WAS BASED ON RESIDUAL TREATED SURFACE (A-262). IN OTHER WORDS, THE LAB TESTS WERE BASED ON THE SMOKE RESIDUE ON THE SURFACE AND THE FBI STATEMENT IS BASED ON MARROW OF THE BONE.

PAPUCCI TESTING LABORATORIES

(A-259 THROUGH A-267)

THE RESULTS OF THE LABORATORY TESTS ARE SHOCKING ! THE RESULTS SHOW:

1. THE BODY WAS LOADED WITH GRENADE SCHRAPPNEL THROUGHOUT WITH METALIC PARTICLES APPROXIMATELY 2 TO 3 INCHES APART. SUCH PARTICLES WERE IN THE UPPER LEGS, TORSO, ARMS, NECK AND SKULL. (A-259)

2. A PARTIALLY CORRODED ALUMINUM TUBING APPROXIMATELY TWO FEET (2') LONG WAS FOUND IN THE CHEST AND ABDOMINAL CAVITY LYING VERTICALLY TO THE BODY TRUNK. SUCH A FOREIGN OBJECT HAD NO BUSINESS IN THE CABINET. THE ALUMINUM WAS NOT A PART OF THE HELICOPTER, ALTHOUGH IT APPARENTLY WAS PLACED THERE TO REPRESENT THE AIRCRAFT. (A-260 & A-267)

3. THE ID TAG WAS NEVER IN A HELICOPTER FIRE. IT WAS NEVER SUBJECTED TO OVER 200 DEG F. THE RESIDUE ON THE SURFACE INDICATES IT WAS BURNED WITH SIMPLE PAPER. (A-261)

4. THE SKULL AND OTHER BONE SURFACES SHOW THE REMAINS WERE BURNED WITH REGULAR GASOLINE AS THE TETRO ETHYL LEAD CONTENT INDICATES. THE CHINOOK, CH-46 USES JP-4 OR JP-5, NON-LEADED KEROSENE. (A-262, 263 & A-265)

AFFIDAVIT (A-269 THROUGH A-277)

THE AFFIDAVITS FROM MARK'S RELATIVES AND SERVICE BUDDIES INCLUDE THOSE PERSONS NEAREST TO HIM WHO NOT ONLY MAKE STATEMENTS ON MARK'S HEIGHT, BUT SUPPORT THOSE STATEMENTS WITH PHOTOGRAPHS. THE MAJORITY OF THE PHOTOGRAPHS ARE THOSE USED BY DR. MICHAEL CHARNEY IN HIS REPORTS ON PAGES A-027 THROUGH A-047.

ALSO INCLUDED ARE THE RECORDS FROM MARK'S FAMILY DOCTOR GIVING HIS HEIGHT IN 1963 AS 5' 9 1/2". (A-277) THIS HEIGHT CORRESPONDS TO A MEASUREMENT APPROXIMATELY TWO TO THREE MONTHS LATER, WHICH SHOWED HIS HEIGHT AT 5' 10" IN HIS HIGH SCHOOL FOOTBALL ROSTER. (A-C20)

The Dental Scene

There is no mandible and the alveolar ridge of the maxilla is mostly missing.

From what is left of the maxillary alveolar ridge it would appear that teeth numbers 2, 3 and 4 were missing antemortem.

It is also possible that #1 was either missing or had moved over into the space of #2 when it was removed.

The area at #14 is open and spongy, but it would appear that the tooth had been removed antemortem.

Tooth number 15 that shows two occlusal restorations is not well-matched with a dental radiograph of that tooth in a 1964 antemortem of Mark Dennis. This radiograph shows decay in the distal pit and possibly in the central pit, but it is not positive. The central occlusal restoration is not a "pit" but far more extensive. Would recording?

The 1964 antemortem radiograph of Mark shows #14 with a large decay and the radiograph of 1965 shows this tooth had been removed.

The angling of the antemortem radiographs make the root morphology not good for matching.

In all, what is left of the dentition of this case and its matching with the antemortem picture does not help to either include or exclude a positive identification.

Summation

Mark Dennis at 16 years is listed as being 5feet10 inches and 154 pounds from the high school records. Photographs of Mark alongside his sister Eileen in flats standing at 5feet10 inches, show Mark to be taller. It is almost certain that some growth would have taken place from this to his age at almost 25 years when he is presumed to have died. It is not easy to determine if Mark was bow-legged from the two photographs I have as he is standing with feet spread apart, but he does not appear to be bow-legged. One in his Marine uniform shows the trousers hanging straight. The family says he was not bow-legged. The person represented by these remains is most decidedly bow-legged and too far off the height and weight of Mark.

All measurements and observations are on file and available upon request.

faithfully,

michael charney

CORRECTION TO DR. CHARNEY REPORT OF 14 FEB 88
(SEE PAGES A-031 TO A-033)

THE FOLLOWING TWO MISTAKES WERE MADE IN CALCULATIONS BY DR. CHARNEY. FIRST, 2.30 WAS ERRONEOUSLY ENTERED INTO THE HEIGHT FORMULA WHEN IT SHOULD HAVE BEEN 2.38. DR. CHARNEY EXPLAINS THIS ERROR ON PAGES A-032 & A-033.

SECONDLY, A MEASUREMENT OF 45.3 cm WAS TYPED AS 44.3 cm WHEN THE REPORT WAS TRANSCRIBED FROM DR. CHARNEY'S NOTES. PAGE A-031 SHOWS THE ACTUAL MEASUREMENT OF 45.3 cm TAKEN BY DR. CHARNEY AT THE TIME OF HIS ACTUAL RESEARCH IN HIS LAB.

WITH BOTH ERRORS CORRECTED, THE HEIGHT FORMULA IS:

$2.38 \times 45.3 + 61.41 = \text{HEIGHT IN cm} \pm 3.27 \text{ cm}$
 $\times 0.3937 = \text{HEIGHT IN INCHES} \pm 1.3 \text{ in.}$ $= 66.6 \pm 1.3 \text{ INCHES}$
 OR 65.3" MINIMUM TO 67.9" MAXIMUM

Mr Jerry Dennis

Dear Mr Dennis:

Some explanation of my error in calculating the stature from the left femur of the remains identified by CILHI as that of Mark Dennis is in order.

The accompanying sheet is from my 54-page laboratory manual I give to my students in my Fall semester class in forensic anthropology. This table is taken from that of Trotter and Gleser, 1958 as appears in all publications dealing with stature reconstruction. You will note that the second line under Male Caucasoids, the regression formula for the femur, reads, "2.30 (femur) + 61.41 ± 3.27 (cm)". Here is the error. In the preparation of this page I made the error in the transcription and unfortunately my students who have this will be plagued. It should read 2.38.

I have made the necessary correction and it is ironic that the day I did the measurement of the bone in question and calculated the resulting stature, you taped me and on the video tape I can clearly be heard saying 2.38 and not 2.30. You have my apologies.

As for any significance of this error in the identification of the skeletal remains, it has none. The stature of the person of these remains is some 5.5 inches below that of Mark Dennis and given the complete length of the left femur with a plus-or-minus figure of 1.3 inches, it cannot be stretched to fit Mark. It passes all understanding of proper procedure why this femur was ignored by CILHI in its recent study.

Dear Mr Dennis:

In his report of 16 April 1989, Dr Maples says he was able to superimpose the vertebrae in the skeletal remains CILHI 0055-88 onto the the first three thoracic vertebrae of the chest X-ray of Mark Dennis taken 4 February 1964. The results, however, he said were "very consistent", verbiage which is not scientific and negates any confidence in his study. His report did not include any photography as supporting evidence, merely a written one. This has necessitated a study done here with such supporting photographic evidence.

The original chest X-ray of Mark Dennis was received from CILHI and the first attempt at enhancement was done at the X-ray laboratory of the University Student Health facility. Photographs 1,2,3 and 4 show the enhancement attempt. The duplicator dial setting does not show exposure time and this I checked and noted on each print. Enhancement of the thoracic vertebrae if any is negligible.

The four radiographs were then taken to Michael L Dewey of the video studio of Instructional Services of the University. Glossy print #5 is the result as told in Dewey's report. Instead of the macro video lens as used by Maples, Dewey used a zoom lens, a "Canon J13x9B3-11 zoom lens with X2 tele-extender". The difference between the two is the distance of the lens from the object under study, the macro lens being up close, the zoom lens further back but the magnification of the image the same.

The radiographs were then taken to Dr Fitzhorn of the Department of Mechanical Engineering for further study by digitization with the image processing system.

The reports of Dewey and Fitzhorn point out that it is impossible to bring out the thoracic vertebrae of the chest X-Ray of Dennis to the sharpness necessary for superimposition of the actual vertebrae from the remains, CILHI 0055-88. The resolution is just not there, it being far too low. The cathode tube of the X-ray is not designed like the lens of a camera where the depth of focus can be adjusted by the lens opening. The function of the chest X-ray is to examine the lungs for disorders such as infection (pneumonia, tuberculosis, etc) malignancies. It is not designed to bring out the whole chest from front to back in sharp focus.

Unless Dr Maples' study does show the vertebrae in sharp total outline, his attempt at superimposition has no validity. Nor can this chest X-ray of Mark Dennis be of any aid in the identification of the skeletal remains.

faithfully,

Michael Charney

On December 6, 1989, I set up the following equipment in an attempt to enhance the chest X-ray of Mark Dennis dated February 4, 1964, that I received from Dr. Michael Charney. I adjusted the camera for maximum sensitivity and enhancement of detail, however, the resolution of the chest X-ray is too low to produce a detailed outline of the vertebrae. I do not believe it is possible to obtain any more detail than I have done with this equipment. I have the results of our tests recorded on one inch video tape.

Dear Dr. Charney:

As you requested, we examined the chest x-ray labelled 236 and dated 2/4/64. After digitization with our TRAPIX 5500 image processing system, we applied several filtering and enhancing algorithms to the region containing the neck vertebrae. We first performed a histogram equalization since the area largely contains very bright pixels, and then high-pass filtered the region to try to bring out as much detail as possible.

After performing these operations, the resulting region still had very little definition. The outlines of each vertebra were somewhat difficult to locate. In order to further refine these outlines, we performed a 3x3 Laplacian filter as well as variants of the Laplacian, with little success. I believe several factors contributed to this lack of success.

1. the size of the region of interest in the x-ray (a little over 1 square cm)
2. the state of the x-ray (scratched)
3. the medium resolution of the digitizing camera used (512x512)
4. a non-optimal lens on the camera (a macro-zoom lens would be ideal)

Given an optimal digitization (1024x1024 camera with a macro-zoom lens and an optically fine x-ray) more information could possibly be obtained from the x-ray than we were able to reveal. I suspect however, that even an optimal digitization may not reveal the amount of outline information necessary to perform a photographic superimposition of the vertebrae with any degree of confidence.

Subject: Several cervical vertebra.

Object: To determine if these vertebra can be identified as those of submitted chest x-ray, number 220 R, 2/4/84.

Submitted items: Original x-ray; 3 duplicate x-rays each made from the original and each exposed progressively more; 1 television enhanced (contrast of light and dark areas expanded) photographic print. Several original cervical vertebra.

The chest x-ray was made specifically for, I'm assuming, disease diagnostics of the lungs. The skeletal features are poorly depicted with the vertebrae being amongst the worst. A single frontal view of x-rayed vertebra, specifically for bone features, would in itself be extremely difficult to compare and identify to original vertebra.

Possibly several views including diagonals, back and front might allow a proximity of identification.

The placement of an external photograph of a skull with a photograph of the actual skull lends itself to very remarkable identification because of the large number of dimensions which can specifically be pointed to relative to both photographs: teeth, jaw height and width, eye sockets, special dimensions between ears, bridge of the nose, slope of the cranium in several areas, etc. All of these areas can, if carefully done, be fitted, photo to photo. It becomes quite obvious if the two photos do not match and quite obvious also if they do match.

With the extremely poor quality and quantity of information within the x-rays, enhanced or not, I would say it is impossible to even suggest an identification.

Respectfully submitted,

Dear Mr. Rogers:

The finalization of the troublesome case, "Mark Dennis," CIHI 0055-88, will come down to one trait, that of height.

The remainder of traits learned from the skeletal remains—sex, age at time of death, race, weight—can be accepted as consistent with Mark's. In the matter of the sex, some 95% or more of our military personnel in Vietnam were male, 85% or more in his age bracket, 75% or more racially caucasoid. All these traits are consistent, but what is not consistent is the height, nor is it even close.

As though this case is not involved enough, several factors, some initiated by CIHI, have made it more so.

(1) Mark Dennis's medical records list his height differently—67-1/4 inches on one and 69-1/2 inches on the enlistment form.

(2) CIHI anthropologist Dr. Hinkes used the right femur fragment to estimate the probable length of the bone and then entered the regression formulas for stature based on this estimated length, making for an error factor of 3.5 inches, plus or minus. The left femur, though broken in two, was complete in length when the two ends were abutted. The use of the left femur for the height would give an error factor of 1.3 inches, plus or minus. Why was the left femur not used? Dr. Hinkes in his depiction of the skeletal remains on the diagram on Form DD892 shows the left femur as missing the lower part, in black. This is not true, as an examination of the left femur will show. A portion of the anterior aspect is gouged out, but not totally. This bone is complete in length and it is the only long bone of the upper and lower limbs that is.

(3) Dr. Maples in his 27 November 1988 report states that the left femur measures 45.3 cm rather than the 44.3 cm I got. Dr. Hinkes would have the right femur estimated at 46.1 cm. If we accept the 45.3 cm of Maples (and I shall not argue on this here), this makes the height 169.24 cm or 66.623 inches +/- 1.3 inches. These bones are of a man 5feet6.6inches +/- 1.3 inches. Thus, on the higher scale it could be as tall as almost 5feet8inches. This is close to the one for Mark on his medical record.

(4) CIHI decided to have a DNA fingerprint done by Lifecodes of New York. With all the bones they had to choose from (after samples from the teeth gave no results), the one long bone that was complete—the left femur—was chosen. A sample was taken from the broken end.

We come now to the question of Mark's true height. Photograph Number 1, taken in September 1963 when Mark was seventeen years, shows: brother Jerry at picture's left, standing at 5feet11inches (six feet in shoes); Sister Eileen at 5feet10inches (in flats); and sister Anne at 5feet9inches (in 3-inch heels).

charney-rogers

Mark is taller than both sisters, and at the same height as brother Jerry.

Photograph Number 2 shows Mark and his brother-in-law Nova Lee Curtis. This was taken in March 1966, just before Mark left for Vietnam. Curtis's height is given at 6feet3inches on his Army discharge identification card issued in May 1985 and at 6feet2inches on his Ohio driver's license.

Photograph Number 3 shows myself and my son Jared, taken on 26 July 1989 as indicated, and notarized by the attached letter.

The relationship of Mark to Nova clearly indicates a height greater than that shown by me alongside my son. I measured at 5feet11inches alongside Jared's 6feet2inches. Mark must have been 6feet tall or within a half inch of that height.

The short left femur for so tall a person could have been due to a disproportioned person. That is, short legs going with a long trunk. However, Photograph 4 of Mark alongside his sister Anne taken at the same time as that with Curtis shows this not to be so. Mark was in what one would call a normal proportion of limbs and trunk. In this photograph with Anne at 5feet9inches (in her 3-inch heels), Mark is clearly 2-1/2 to 3 inches taller.

It is unreasonable to accept as remotely possible that a bone, complete in length, giving a height of 5feet6.6inches, with +/- 1.3 inches can be that of a person 5.4 inches taller.

I said at the beginning of this report that the identification must come down to a question of height. - CIIHI and Dr. Maples and Kirby should not totally shun the left femur and accept, as they do, the height as gotten from the fragment of the right femur.

Dr. Maples has made argument for the consistency of the dental picture. He neglects to mention that the dental experts could do no better than say the teeth were consistent. This does not denote a positive identification. If the teeth did so indicate, the reports would be unequivocal, and they are not. Dr. Maples uses such terms as "good consistency" and the former dental officer at CIIHI used terms such as "uniquely consistent." Such attempts to enrich the word "consistent" are out of order. They are not scientific; they have no meaning whatsoever beyond just plain "consistent."

On the dental remains, Dr. Campbell in his report of 30 June 1988 states in his summation, "it is the opinion of both Dr. Ebert and myself that the maxillary fragment shown in the postmortem X-ray is consistent with that of Mark V. Dennis, however, positive identification, utilizing only the documents received is not possible." Consistent is not positive identification.

Dr. Brian C. Smith, dental officer at CIIHI, in his report of 16 September 1988, states in conclusion that the dental evidence is not inconsistent with the identification of Dennis, Mark V. Not inconsistent! Dr. Maples would have one accept this as proof of positive, individual identification. Where the match is perfect one says so, and not just "consistent."

charney-rogers

Dr. Maples also refers to the report of Dr. Angel of the Smithsonian, claiming that Dr. Angel found "good consistency" between the remains and Dennis's traits. What Dr. Maples fails to mention is that Dr. Angel, when questioned by TV reporter John Quinones on the ABC "World News Tonight" show of Peter Jennings in early October of 1985 said in answer to Quinones's question:

"Dr. were you able to positively identify these remains as those of Mark Dennis?"

Dr. Angel replied:

"Ah, not absolutely, positively."

Dr. Angel has made clear by this short statement the very real difference between consistency and positive identification.

We have now the report of Dr. Maples dated 16 April 1989, of the superimposition study of the antemortem chest radiograph of Mark Dennis taken at his enlistment. It deals with the dental aspect as well, but the teeth were so cut to pieces by the search for DNA as to render them worthless for such study, given their small size to start with. Let us treat, rather, with the superimposition of the chest radiograph and the cervical vertebrae. Again, the best Dr. Maples can do is to show consistency with the added emphasis "very consistent." I submit that this is not scientific reporting, it is not scholarly reporting. I have made several positive, individual identifications using the technique of superimposition of skulls and photographs, employing various instruments—digitizing skull by laser-computer and 2-D camera, two video cameras and two 35-mm projectors. Enhancement of photographs is no mysterious process, as Dr. Maples would appear to imply. If he meant otherwise, why cannot he furnish me with a copy of the videotape he has made, so that I can study it? My university (Colorado State) has a large body of scientists engaged in well-funded research. I have all this expertise at my command whenever I so need.

Dr. Maples in this enhancement study can do no more than claim consistency as he has throughout all his reports. Consistency is not enough, when to make this identification stick as that of Mark V. Dennis, you must stretch the stature some five to six inches.

faithfully,

Michael Charney

Dear Mr Dennis:

Please include this report with that of 29 July 1989 when submitting to the AFIRB, Washington, D C on the case of the identification of the human remains, CILHI 0055-88.

In the July report I took issue with the effort of CILHI and Dr Maples in claiming consistency of traits found on the remains with details from the medical record of Mark as proof of positive, individual identification.

What follows are two reports of the identification procedure, one where all traits gleaned from the remains showed a consistency with the missing person and one where the traits were individual and could not be anyone but that individual.

Case 1

A pilot left Denver in 1971 in a single-engine plane headed for Salt Lake City. The plane disappeared over the front range of the Rocky Mountains and was not found till ten years later, in 1981 just outside of Estes Park in Larimer County about 50 miles from Denver. Photo #1: the skeletal remains collected in and about the wreckage of the plane.

Working "blind", the few fragmented remains gave following results:

Sex: male. Iliac fragment of the innominate (pelvic bone) is large. The scapulae glenoid fossae are in the male range, measuring 4.4 and 4.0 cm respectively (greater than 3.7 cm is male).

Age: Photo #2 shows a lumbar vertebra that is juxtaposed to that of a young person. The degree of arthritic lipping along the border of the vertebra is typical of a person in the mid-sixties.

Height: Photo #3 is that of the fragment of the left femur. Landmarks 1 and 2 according to Steele (1969) were present; the head and lesser trochanter. This yielded a stature of 5feet10.7 inches with a error factor of 3.5 inches.

Weight: Insurance tables give a suggested weight of 170 pounds for such a person, but the long bones were slight and muscle markings not pronounced. The weight, hence, was put at 150 + 5 pounds.

Race: Photo #4 shows a badly worn upper central incisor. This with a small segment of the right mandible was all left of the skull. The tooth shows marked build-up of enamel on the edges of the tooth, a condition known as sphenoidal. When this person was twenty years of age, the sphenoidal had to be much more pronounced. This is a mongoloid trait, American Indian for the most part here. This individual had to have some Indian in his immediate ancestry.

Summation: These remains are those of a male, in mid-sixties, 5feet 10.5 inches + 3.5 inches, 150 + 5 pounds, with American Indian probably as part of his racial identity.

Mr Drummond, the pilot who took off in the plane, was: male, 65 years, 5feet11inches, 150 pounds, caucasoid with a mother who was French-Canadian of the Metis ethnic group. His father was Scots. The Metis are a separate ethnic breeding population descended from the mixture of the french fur trappers and Indian women of the 18th and 19th Centuries.

The skeletal remains were, thus, in agreement with those of Drummond, but nothing on the bones yielded information that these were those of Drummond and only Drummond. There are others with the same traits. The question of course is what would just such another be doing in that plane just there. This is not the decision for the forensic anthropologist to make. His task is the analysis of the remains. These remains were consistent the traits of Drummond and that is all the scientist can say here. It was now up to the family to accept or reject the bones as identified. In this case they accented.

Body #129 of the Big Thompson Flood, 31 July 1976, Larimer County, Colorado. Photo #1, the skull in frontal view. Photo #2, the skull in lateral or profile view. This is the skull of a male, old age, caucasoid. The post-cranial remains gave a height of 5feet10inches + 1.2 inches, a weight of 150 + 5 pounds.

Two old men had been reported missing and one had fallen down 22 steps some 9 years earlier. The Weld County Hospital in Greeley had sent over X-rays on one of the missing, Claude Allen Schell. Photo #3 shows the frontal sinus of Schell. It has three lobes, the one on the photo's right, divided into three with indentations on the superior surfaces. The next two are individual lobes. Photo #4, that of the skull of Body #129, shows exactly the same sinus morphology; three lobes, the right with three separate sections with the indentations on the superior surfaces and then the two individual lobes. All sinuses are individual, no two people will have the same sinus patterns, regardless of which sinus and I am not certain if this is not applicable to identical twins. Claude Allen Schell was 96 years old, 5feet10inches, 150 pounds. There is no question here of the individual, personal identification.

These two cases I trust will demonstrate the difference between an identification based on consistency of findings as against an identification based on personal, individual traits such as sinus patterns, cranial suture patterns, bone anomalies, dental restorations where the antemortem X-rays are available for comparison and so forth.

faithfully,

Michael Charney

Dear Dr. Kerley,

I am responding to your request for an explanation of why the Lifecodes' RFLP DNA-PRINTTM test was unsuccessful on the bone samples submitted under our case number FI10400.

From my understanding of the case, there are two reasons for the DNA obtained to be of such a poor quality that the RFLP test would give negative results. First, the age of the samples and the humid conditions present in Vietnam would work against preserving the DNA so that the RFLP test could not be done. Second, my understanding of the treatment the bones received in order to remove the tissue, i.e., heated, would in itself destroy the DNA for RFLP analysis.

Since both of these conditions exist in this case, it would be expected that the DNA present in these samples would be degraded to the extent that the RFLP test would be negative.

When we met in New York a few weeks ago we discussed another DNA test that Lifecodes has been validating. In this second test samples of degraded DNA can sometimes be analyzed for the presence of genetic polymorphisms found on the HLA DQ α region of the DNA.

We tested the bones in this case using the second DNA system and compared them with the blood of Mrs. Dennis. In every instance where results were obtained, the bones showed HLA DQ α type 1. The HLA DQ α type of Mrs. Dennis also contains the HLA DQ α type 1.

These test results indicate that Mrs. Dennis is genetically consistent with being the mother of the individual whose bones were submitted. This genetic comparison does not constitute an absolute biological identification. Also, because this is still a research technique, a probability of maternity cannot be calculated.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

Re: CILHI 0055-88 (Dennis, Mark V.)

Dear LCol. Webb:

The materials examined, in the original submission, consisted of the following:

1. One Periapical x-ray's labeled-" Antemortem, Mark V. Dennis, SN- 778-91-45 USN ". There was no date present.
2. Two periapical x-ray's labeled-" CILHI 0055-88, Remains of Mark V. Dennis, SN- 778-91-45 ". There was no date present.

The quality of the antemortem x-ray was good and that of the postmortem x-ray excellent, however, there was a difference in angulation between the two.

The significant features of the x-ray's are as follows:

1. Antemortem- #12-virgin, #13-virgin, #14-extensively carious, #15-virgin, and #16-impacted.
2. Postmortem- #15-two separate occlusal restorations or one occlusal and one occlusal-lingual restoration, and #16-impacted. #14-has been extracted and the alveolus has healed.

Visual comparison of the antemortem/postmortem x-ray's revealed the following:

1. Overall crown and root formation of #15 is similar, with the exception of the restorations present in the postmortem films.
2. Overall crown and tooth position of #16 is similar. only a small portion of the root structure is present in the antemortem film therefore no comparison could be made.
3. The pulp chambers of #'s 15 & 16 are similar; as are the pulp canals.
4. The position of #16 appears to be similar, however, difficulty arises, when comparing the two, due to improper angulation of the postmortem x-ray.

Side by side enhancement was then performed resulting in no change of the findings from the visual comparison. several questions did arise at this point, as follows:

1. What was the time frame between the taking of the

Rec'd 11-26-88

A-062

- antemortem x-ray and the MIA report on Mark V. Dennis?
2. What is the date of the antemortem film?
 3. Are there any more antemortem and postmortem films available for comparison?
 4. May we have a copy of the Dental Standard Form 603?
 5. Can the postmortem x-ray be redone to more closely approximate the angle present in the antemortem film?

These questions were conveyed, to Dr. Ellis Kerley, by phone on May 19, 1988. the following documents were received, from Dr. Kerly, May 26, 1988:

1. Copy of the Dental Standard Form 603 for Mark V. Dennis, dated 10 June 84.
2. Dental Identification Chart, AF Form 697A for Mark V. Dennis, dated 21 August 71.
3. A letter, dated 21 July 71, signed by Col. John J. Tarsitano and Lt. Col. Gilbert L. Koehler, summarizing their findings.
4. Six(6) postmortem periapical x-ray's and three(3) occlusal film periapical x-ray's, dated 11 May 88 and labeled CILHI 0055-88.

These documents and x-ray's were reviewed on 1 June 88 and the restorations in #15 and the extraction of #14 were confirmed (see SF 603). Further enhancement was carried out on 13 June 88, on all x-ray's submitted and photographs taken for side-by-side comparison utilizing an enlargement projection technique.

The side-by side comparison, of the enhanced x-ray's, was completed on June 27, 1988 by simultaneously projecting the enhanced photographs enlarged to approximately the same size. There were no morphological discrepancies noted; the area of tooth #14 showed healed alveolar bone; the root contour, pulp chamber, and pulp canal configuration of tooth #15 were similar; and the coronal contour, viewable, of tooth #16 was similar however, the entire coronal portion was not present on the antemortem x-ray.

Conclusions:

1. There are many areas of consistency present.
2. There are no unexplainable or undocumented discrepancies present.
3. There are no areas of individuality present that would allow this fragment to be positively identified based upon x-ray comparison only.

Opinion:

It is the opinion of both Dr. Ebert and myself that the maxillary fragment, shown in the postmortem x-ray, is consistent with that of Mark V. Dennis, however; positive identification, utilizing only the documents received, is not possible.

ENHANCEMENT AND ANALYSIS OF X-RAY IMAGES FOR THE CENTRAL IDENTIFICATION LABORATORY, HAWAII:
MARK DENNIS CASE

Image Analysis Method and Photogrammetric Assessment

Electronic image analysis was performed on both the antemortem and postmortem x-rays using an analog image analysis system at Ebert & Associates' laboratory in Albuquerque, New Mexico. This system was designed to facilitate the inspection of minute details of x-rays through the enhancement of such images. Electronic image enhancement, through the extreme magnification of x-rays, and the emphasis of their contrast and the areas where the gray scale of such images changes, rather than simply their absolute value (edge enhancement), allows the forensic scientist to assess subtle patterning in an x-ray or other photographic image which would not otherwise be apparent on the original film. It does not add anything to the image, but rather simplifies it so that the forensic scientist can see very subtle patterning in the images being compared.

Rec'd 11-26-88 A-064

In the case of the antemortem and postmortem remains inspected here, the details of the internal structure of the second molar [No. 15] are remarkably similar. First, in a gross sense, the pulp cavity of the two images of the tooth are quite consistent, with a "horn" or protrusion to the left of the pulp cavity, as it appears on the x-ray images, and another to the right side (less apparent on the antemortem image, but still there).

It must be borne in mind that the post-mortem x-ray is not exposed at the exact angle of the antemortem x-ray. When this is the case, it can always be contended that the patterning of the internal structure of the tooth does not appear "exactly" the same. Taking into account the slight angular discrepancy between the x-rays, however, the root canal configurations are of the same shape. At the extreme left (forward) edge of the second molar as it appears on both of the x-ray images, a denser portion of the tooth forms a crescentic pattern that is virtually identical in the two x-rays. A similar, denser area at the left side of the crown of the second molar is less distinct, but is still of consistent shape on both of the two x-rays. A very small internal inconsistency near the top and to the right of this right (posterior) denser area is also apparent on both x-rays.

Details of the central root canal are also consistent between the two images, particularly with respect to two "bulges" in the canal immediately above the pulp cavity. These dual bulges appear clearly on both of the images.

A-066

Given the forensic evidence provided by the antemortem and postmortem x-rays available here, and my experience in interpreting such electronically enhanced x-ray images, my conclusion is that by virtue of the evidence at hand the two teeth (second molars) are remarkably similar and consistent. Details of the third molar, though it has not fully developed in the antemortem x-ray, are also consistent. There is no photogrammetric reason to believe that these two x-rays do not represent the same two teeth.

James Ian Ebert

FORENSIC ODONTOLOGY REPORT: CILHI 0055-88

FORENSIC ODONTOLOGY SECTION
U.S. ARMY CENTRAL IDENTIFICATION LABORATORY, HAWAII

POSTMORTEM EVIDENCE: The dental remains of CILHI 0055-88 consist of partially intact maxillae with three teeth (Universal System #1, #15, and #16). The maxillary alveolar process exhibits widespread loss of mid-arch and anterior alveolar bone. The condition of the remaining bone indicates that teeth #2, #11, and #13 were lost postmortem and that tooth #14 was missing antemortem. See DD Form 891 dated 15 September 1988 for a graphic description of the dental remains. All teeth were radiographed in duplicate with Size 2 dental film at 10 MA, 80 KVP, and 18/60 seconds. The results are the five periapical films dated 15 September 1988.

ANTEMORTEM EVIDENCE: Dental records: One SF 603 dated "JUN 10 1964" and labeled "DENNIS, MARK V." with a last entry of "10/20/65". Dental radiographs: One frame of bitewing dental films dated "initial films" and labeled "Dennis, M. V.". A second frame of bitewing dental films dated "8/26/65" and labeled "Dennis, M. V.". One envelope labeled "Dental X-Rays for Mark V Dennis", containing one periapical film dated "1964", and two other periapical films and one occlusal film labeled "Postmortem radiographs accomplished 21 JUL 1971 Medical Center Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio".

NOTES: The "initial films", although undated, show tooth #3 to be present and must have been produced prior to the documented extraction date of tooth #3 on 27 November 1964.

The SF 603 indicates that tooth #14 was extracted in January 1964. This procedure follows a series of treatments provided in November 1964. Therefore, it is most probable that tooth #14 was actually removed in January 1965, and recorded incorrectly with the past year's date of 1964.

The SF 603, Section III, Part 17 indicates that teeth #2 and #3 were restored with O-AM in September 1965. However, tooth #3 was extracted earlier and is missing in radiographs dated August 1965. It is most probable that Section III, Part 15 is correct as it shows tooth #3, not #3, as being restored.

The SF 603 indicates that tooth #14 was restored with O-AM, O-AM in October 1965. Since tooth #14 was extracted and is missing in radiographs dated August 1965, it is most probable that the tooth actually restored was #15. This correction would be consistent with the SF 603 documentation that all other second molars were being treated for similar lesions during the same series of appointments.

COMPARISON: The dental remains were received in poor condition, missing a root tip visible in earlier postmortem radiographs.

Clinical examination of the remains resulted in the following findings:
(1) Impacted teeth #1 and #16 (2) Antemortem presence of teeth #2, #11, and #13 (3) Antemortem absence of tooth #14 (4) Presence of O-AM, O-AM restorations on tooth #15. These findings are not inconsistent with the known dental features of P03 DENNIS as described in the NOTES paragraph above. Radiographic examination of the dental remains and comparison with the antemortem periapical film dated "1964" results in several consistencies. Specifically, the pulp chamber of tooth #15 and coronal anatomy of tooth #16 are very similar. These antemortem and postmortem radiographs were submitted to Dr. Ebert and Dr. Campbell for electronic enhancement and analysis. See Forensic Consultant Reports dated 30 June 1988 and 7 July 1988. Note: These reports allude to the improper angulation of the postmortem radiographs of teeth #15 and #16 as compared to the antemortem "1964" film. However, examination of the antemortem bitewing radiographs, taken before and after the extraction of tooth #14, shows clearly that tooth #15 had drifted mesially. Therefore, exact postmortem duplication of the angle and relationship pictured in the "1964" periapical film, which was taken before the loss of #14 and drifting of #15, would not be possible. DNA-PRINT™ analysis was attempted on teeth #15 and #16. Both teeth were removed for that purpose on 11 May 1988. See Lifecodes Corporation report and Accession #F110402. The results of this analysis were noncontributory.

OPINION: I have compared the dental remains of CILHI 0055-88 with the dental records and radiographs of P03 DENNIS, and find that the radiographic appearance of teeth #15 and #16 to be markedly similar. There are no irresolvable discrepancies and the preponderance of available dental evidence is not inconsistent with the identification of DENNIS, Mark V, ID# 778-91-45, HM-3, USN.

FORENSIC ANTHROPOLOGY REPORT
CILHI 0055-88

4 April 1988

The remains as received appear recently skeletonized, judging by the presence of cartilage, oil, and a characteristic odor. Present are the basicranium, nearly complete axial skeleton, and appendicular portions of a single individual. Small charred areas are noted on the cranium, elbows, and lower limbs, especially the left anterior tibia. The letters "MD" have been hand-printed on the right scapula, humerus, and radius, the left scapula, and the sacrum. The posterior left femur has been longitudinally sectioned, from the lesser trochanter through the gluteal tuberosity. The pubes have been excised but are present.

BIOLOGICAL DETERMINATIONS

SEX

AGE

The pubes are aged at Suchey-Brooks Phase II, 24.7 years (S.D. 4.3 yr). The iliac crest, auricular surface, annular rings, and sacrum are all consistent with an age in the early 20's.

RACE

Morphology of the cranial base and palate is consistent with Caucasoid ancestry.

STATURE & PHYSIQUE

The measured length of segment 1 of the right femur was used to calculate femoral length. This length was used in Trotter's formula for White males to calculate a stature estimate of 67.4" (S.E. 3.5"). Muscle markings and build are of average development.

TRAUMA

The fracture pattern observed on cranium, shoulders, forearms, legs, and sacrum is consistent with crash trauma. These are not thermally-induced fractures.

PATHOLOGIES

No osseous pathologies are observed.

ANOMALIES

There are six segments to the sacrum, a variant more commonly seen in males. It is probably due to sacralization of the first coccygeal vertebra, since fusion is incomplete on the right side (hemisacralization). However, the (rest of the) coccyx was not received with the remains.

COMPARISON WITH ANTEMORTEM RECORDS OF MARK V DENNIS

According to his military medical file, Mark DENNIS is described as a male Caucasoid who would have been nearly 20 years old at time of death. His statistics from 1964 are: height 67.25", weight 152 lb, medium build. Since DENNIS was just 17.5 yr at that time, there was undoubtedly some additional growth afterwards. All of these data are consistent with the biological determinations derived from CILHI 0055-88 skeletal remains, though nothing is definitive. There are no inconsistencies.

To avoid confusion, it must be noted that previous re-processing reports refer to body parts not received with the remains at CILHI, including soft tissue (organs and musculature), a complete thorax (7 ribs, 2 cervical vertebrae, and both clavicles are not present now), head and shaft of right fibula, and possibly more of the facial skeleton. A portion of left radius shaft that was not mentioned in a previous inventory was received with the remains. Apparently, it was during these previous examinations that bone sectioning took place and the remains were reduced to a skeleton, although these actions are not well documented in the available paperwork.

STAFF REVIEW SUMMARY

CILHI 0055-88

The scientific staff of the US Army Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii reviewed on 20 Oct 1988 the recommendation that the remains of CILHI 0055-88 be identified as those of HM3 MARK V DENNIS. There was unanimous support for this recommendation on the following grounds.

1. There was a favorable comparison between the remains and antemortem dental records of HM3 Dennis.
2. The biological determinations of the CILHI anthropologist were consistent with the physical descriptions of HM3 Dennis.
3. There is nothing in the CILHI processing case file that would preclude these remains being those of HM3 Dennis.
4. The available dentition can be excluded as belonging to anyone known to have been in the helicopter other than HM3 Dennis.

NARRATIVE AND EXAMINATION (Continue on reverse or use additional sheets, if required)

BACKGROUND

These remains were received from the U.S. Army Mortuary, Oakland AB, on 1 April 1989. They were believed to be the remains of MARK V DENNIS, one of 13 casualties of a 15 July 1966 helicopter explosion in South Vietnam (MSG 210305Z JUL 66, CG THIRD MAR DIV). The remains were originally processed at Tan Son Nhut Mortuary (TSN 3591-66). Identification was achieved through exclusion: After 12 remains were identified through dentition and/or ID tags, the only unidentified remains were matched with the only unassociated name, DENNIS. These remains have been exhumed and re-analyzed several times since their initial processing. This is the first time they have been examined by CILHI forensic scientists.

CONDITION OF REMAINS

The remains are incomplete and only recently skeletonized. There are small areas of charring. A portion of the left femur and the pubes have been sectioned. Some bones are labeled with a hand-printed "MOD". During examination at CILHI, portions of dental and skeletal material were excised for use in DNA testing.

MEANS OF IDENTIFICATION

Identification was attempted through three avenues: dental, skeletal, and genetic. The dental remains of CILHI 0055-88 were compared with the dental records and radiographs of Mark V DENNIS, and all findings proved consistent with DENNIS. A computer enhancement of antenatal and postmortem dental radiographs also proved consistent with DENNIS. Biological information derived from the skeletal remains is consistent with the information in DENNIS's military medical file. Seven dental/skeletal samples were submitted for DNA-PRINT analysis; the results were inconclusive. (See body of case file for all pertinent reports.)

NARRATIVE AND SUMMARY CONTINUE

A-0.
Circumstantial evidence, in the form of company muster reports immediately before and after the incident and eye witness statements, leaves no doubt that Mark V DENNIS was aboard the helicopter when it exploded. Therefore, based on the dental and skeletal evidence, there is no reason to believe that these are the remains of anyone other than MARK V DENNIS.

Summary prepared by M. J. Hinkes, 21 Sep 88

RECOMMENDATIONS

Based on the findings of the anthropologist and odontologist, the general agreement of all available evidence, and the absence of any conflicting evidence, it is recommended that these remains be identified as those of
MARK V DENNIS -
282-42-1904 HM3 USN -

This recommendation is based on circumstances of the incident as well as biologic determinations made during processing by the anthropologist and odontologist at the US Army Central Identification Laboratory, Hawaii.

Re: CILMI 055-88

Dear Colonel Cole:

I have examined the available evidence in the above case including a portion of the skull and dental x-ray films taken with teeth in position.

It is my opinion that the dental chart dated 15 September 1988 is a correct description as the remains existed on that date based upon that examination.

It is my opinion that the dentition of CILMI 055-88 is totally consistent with the dental record (SP 603) of MARK V. DENNIS dated June 10, 1964 and that my interpretation of the dental record (SP 603) agrees with that of the dental officers (Tarsitano and Koehler in 1971, Smith in 1988).

It is my opinion that the periapical dental x-ray of the upper left molar area reveals characteristics that are interpreted as completely consistent with the postmortem film of the same area in the morphology of the two remaining teeth. Electronic image enhancement of these radiographs is quite valuable in that comparison.

I have considered the circumstances, the reports of competent forensic anthropologists as well as the dental evidence and it is my opinion that the above case is the remains of RM3 MARK V. DENNIS, USN.

Sincerely,

Lowell J. Levine

Re: CILHI 0055-88

On 8 November 1988, while serving as consultant to the Chief, Armed Services Graves Registration Office, Washington, D.C., I am requested by Dr. Ellis A. Kerley, Scientific Director of the CILHI Laboratory to evaluate the incomplete, partially burned and recently skeletonized remains of an individual designated by the above cited case number. The remains reputedly are those of HNS Mark V. DENNIS (282-42-1904) USA.

The observed skeletal materials are essentially consistent with the CILHI anthropology inventory of 4 April 1988 and the drawing on Form DD892 dated 20 September 1988, both produced by Dr. Madeleine J. Hinkes.

The remains are those of a young adult male with a mean age of 24.7 years (S.D. 4.3 years) based on public symphysis changes consistent with Phase II of Suchey-Brooks.

On this same date Dr. William Maples and I jointly measured the fragmentary femur using an osteometric board. The fragment comprising the distal one-fourth of the femur does not articulate with the femoral shaft because an approximately 0.5 cm section has been removed from the most proximal projecting edge of this distal portion. For this reason, three different measurements are taken for comparison with previous reports on this case:

1. Physiological length, cut surface of distal fragment and proximal fragment in contact = (44.8) cm;
2. Morphological length, cut surface of distal fragment and proximal fragment in contact = (45.0) cm;
3. Morphological length, with distal fragment and proximal fragment placed in their approximate anatomical relationship = (45.3) cm.

An independent measurement of Segment 1 using the technique of Steele (1970) for the proximal right femur is approximately 8.0 cm in length. A Segment 1 length of 8.0 cm yields an estimated femoral length of 46.11 cm $\pm$ 2.32 cm (s.e.) for White Males.

Mean staturel estimations based on the three measurements above give heights of 66.7 inches, 66.9 inches, and 67.4 inches respectively. The mean staturel estimation using Steele's Segment 1 produces a height of 67.9 inches ($\pm$ 3.94 s.e.). All staturel are computed using the formulae of Trotter and Gleser (1958) for White Males.

Discussion

My anthropological evaluation of the remains (CILNI 0055-88) are consistent with the known biological data given by the military for RM3 Mark V. DENNIS and is also consistent with the Forensic Anthropology report produced at the CILNI Laboratory and dated 4 April 1988.

In addition, I have examined the postmortem dental radiographs produced on this above cited case and the antemortem dental charts and radiographs labeled Mark V. DENNIS plus the electronic enhancement of the antemortem and postmortem X-rays and conclude that there are no inconsistencies between the antemortem and postmortem records and the Forensic Odontology report produced on 16 September 1988 at the CILNI Laboratory.

The findings of Dr. Michael Charney in his report of 16 February 1988, especially with regard to the estimated living stature and the racial assessment of these remains are not consistent with the observed facts. Dr. Charney determined a left femoral length of 44.3 cm which is shorter than any of the measurements made by Dr. Maples and me. Even our shortest measurement (1) which has the cut distal fragment in contact with the proximal fragment measure more than the 44.3 cm he obtained.

Dr. Charney's staturel computation using the formulae of Trotter and Gleser (1952) for White Males is in error by approximately 3.5 cm because he used only a factor of 2.3 rather than the required 2.38 times his femur length estimation.

Dr. Charney's race estimation on the remains seems to be based solely on the anterior femoral bow which he perceives to be more characteristic of the "Mongoloid racial stock". I find this to be less reliable than the cranial and dental observations which support, in the above cited case, that the remains are those of a basically Caucasian Male. The determination of anterior femoral bow in fragmentary remains must be viewed as spurious at best. (Also, perhaps it would have been well for Dr. Charney to have applied the Mongoloid stature regression formulae to his obtained femoral length instead of using the formulae of White Males).

And, lastly, anterior femoral bow must NOT be construed as the same physical feature as "bow-legged" (i.e., genu varus).

SUMMARY OF INCIDENT

On 15 July 1966, Capt MCALLISTER, Pilot, 1stLt RICHEY, Co-pilot, SGT LUCAS, Door Gunner, and SGT TELFER, Crew Chief were the crew of a CH-46A helicopter participating in "Operation Hasting" troop reinforcement.

After being hit by hostile ground fire (probably from a .50 cal machine-gun), the helicopter made an emergency landing in a mortar emplacement area manned by friendly troops just north of Quang Tri Province, North Vietnam. The troops in the area immediately converged to assist in the rescue efforts, however, the explosions occurring aboard the helicopter precluded an immediate recovery, but ultimately all remains were removed.

Summary of all Available Facts/Information

A-094

1. NIS Report of Investigation dtd 10-23-81 indicated it was considered possible but not likely that an individual could have been flying aboard a helicopter and not listed as a passenger. It was also noted that upon final review of the crash circumstances/operation, no information to support any discrepancies regarding the specific helicopter DENNIS was travelling and the passengers aboard had ever surfaced.

a. Background information:

On 15 July 1966 P03 DENNIS' company was designated to provide support for other military units in Quang Tri Province. Ten helicopters provided transportation to the designated area. A company muster was made prior to departing Dong Ha, the Marine base camp location. Immediately after the incident, the helicopters transporting other company "E" members returned to Dong Ha for re-muster, thus personnel aboard the downed helicopter were known by name and certified as being aboard by the Commander of Company "E". The Commanding Officer of CO. "E" transmitted a letter of condolence dtd 28 July 1966, only after ascertaining Mark Dennis' whereabouts and determining beyond all reasonable doubt that he was aboard the helicopter which crashed.

2. Crash was witnessed by Martin ("Mike") WEENICK a scout for HQ Company, 3rd Battalion. Reference NIS Report of Investigation dtd 08-27-81 (WEENICK's interview).

3. The helicopter made an emergency landing in a mortar emplacement area manned by friendly troops who immediately converged to assist in rescue efforts. However, the explosions occurring aboard the helicopter precluded an immediate recovery, but ultimately all remains were removed. During WEENICK's interview by NIS he indicated "later when volunteers were solicited to remove the bodies, he volunteered along with 6-10 others". (No information available indicates how much "later" S/R efforts began).

4. Subsequent to removal of remains from the Dong Ha area to the division field hospital at Da Nang processing for individual identification and preparation of the certificates of death was accomplished. The reverse side of certificates prepared for each individual, recorded data regarding circumstances and the method of identification (majority by dental comparison) made at Da Nang. U.S.A. Mortuary TSN confirmed identifications made by use of all ID media available including a comparison of physical characteristics (see attached sheet).

5. Date of Incident is certified to be 15 July 1966 per C.G. THIRD WARDIV message DTG 210305Z JUL 66

Clinical and radiographic examination of skull, allegedly of Mark V. Dennis, deceased.

The clinical and radiographic examination of the alleged skull of Mark V. Dennis, deceased, revealed the following:

1. Tooth #1 (upper right 3rd Molar) is in the alveolus in an unerupted position, i.e., impacted.
2. Tooth #2 (upper right 2nd Molar) only root fragments remain.
3. Tooth #3 (upper right 1st Molar) is absent but the alveolar process in this area is healed over indicating pre-mortem extraction of this tooth. (At least six months prior to time of death.)
4. Teeth #4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13 are missing and so is the alveolar process normally surrounding their roots. No information can be gained here.
5. Tooth #14 (upper left 1st Molar) is missing, however, like tooth #1 (upper right first Molar) there is some healed alveolar bone present indicating pre-mortem extraction of this tooth. (At least six months prior to time of death.)
6. Tooth #15 (upper left second Molar) is in place and has present two occlusal amalgam fillings.
7. Tooth #16 (upper left 3rd Molar) is in the alveolus in an unerupted position, i.e., impacted.

Correlation of examination findings with Pre-Mortem dental record and dental radiographs of Mark V. Dennis, deceased:

Mark V. Dennis's records and radiographs reveal that he had teeth #1 and 16 in unerupted positions (impacted) as did the remains.

Mark V. Dennis had had teeth #3 and 14 extracted in 1964 which correlates with the findings of the skull examination.

According to Mark V. Dennis's dental record, he had two occlusal amalgam fillings placed in tooth #14 on 8 October 1963. This is obviously a mistake in charting for tooth #14 had been extracted a year before. Further, his radiographs reveal that tooth #14 was so broken down with caries that if it had been restored it would have taken a very large restoration, possibly a crown. What probably happened was that tooth #15, a molar tooth which had drifted towards the space where tooth #14 had been, was mistaken for tooth #14 and so recorded. That this is a common mistake and often encountered in dental identification problems we refer you to a recent article appearing in the Journal of the American Dental Association (p. 166-169, July 1971) where a similar set of circumstances prevailed.

Conclusions:

1. We cannot say that this skull was not that of Mark V. Dennis.
2. We can say that this skull could be that of Mark V. Dennis for the following reasons:
 - a. Both had impacted 3rd molars (Teeth #1 and 16).
 - b. Both had had upper first molars extracted (teeth #3 and 14) at least six months prior to 1966.
 - c. Both had had two amalgam fillings placed in tooth #15.

Dear Captain Curtis:

The remains studied in the laboratory of the Montgomery County Coroner at Dayton, Ohio during the morning of 7/22/71 included a torso and calvarium showing burn markings, fragmentation of bones and actual loss of bone on the ventral thorax, face (jaw, nasal, and cheek bones missing), and top frontal and right side of skull; there were also large parts of both humeri, the right elbow, both femora with thigh muscles, but fractures and burn damage, and the upper ends of the tibiae. There was some staining possibly from oxides from metal fragments.

Sex criteria are all male. Approximate femur length of 46-47 cm and humerus length over 32 cm suggests stature between 5'7 and 5'9"; trunk length, hard to estimate on the pelvis vertebral column and head, was well over 90 cm., suggesting a long trunk. Shoulders may have been broad, hips average, not narrow. The bones are quite thick. Weight might have been average or just above since muscles seemed well developed.

Race criteria are White.

Age criteria range between about 18 (third molars erupting) and 25 (front part of pubic symphysis); epiphyses are closed but there are no signs of ageing at joints or on vertebrae: 20-21 is the physiological age appearance.

The skull, badly broken, was clearly rather high and not broad, the face also. Remnants of the lower left side of the nose clearly show it to have been high-bridged and quite narrow. The jaw is missing (burnt?).

The front tooth alveolar border of the upper jaw is broken away, leaving only the molar area on each side, and even this is damaged on the right with only the lingual root remaining of the 2nd molar.

Alveoli of the 1st molars are closed over, indicating extraction some time before death. The right second molar has two crown fillings, is 4-cusped, average in size (10 x 11 mm). The right third molar is unerupted though clearly visible; the left third molar is in process of erupting; I can't tell if the wisdom teeth would have remained "impacted" or completed their eruption.

There are no signs of old healed injuries on the bones available; the only exostoses are small ones on the posterior clinoid processes behind the pituitary fossa.

Except that age criteria suggest a man in his beginning 20s agreement with the available data on Mark Dennis seems to me perfect. Though the dental X-rays taken in life are insufficient to prove identity by superimposition, the preserved teeth agree with the appearance of the X-rays (except for the 2nd molar filling done apparently after the X-rays were taken). The photographs of Mark Dennis fit deductions from the fragmentary skull and also in my opinion look more mature than the average 17-year old. Probably his development was a little ahead of his actual age.

Sincerely yours,

5. On 21 Oct 71 at the Montgomery County Morgue the Air Force Identification Specialist, in the presence of Frank A. Hefling, met given history of a metal casket. The casket contained an enlisted Navy uniform and remains wrapped in an OD woolen blanket, white sheet and polyethylene.

6. There follows extracts from SF 88 (Mark "D" Dennis, 7769145) dated 2/4/64:

Age	Height	Weight	Build	Complexion	Other
27 yrs. - 28, 13 days	5' 10"	175	Slender	Light	None

NOTES: (1) At time of death decedent's age would be 27 yrs, 9 mos, 4 days.
(2) At time of death decedent's height could be about 59.0".

7. Identification Processing:

1. The remains removed from the casket disclosed the following:

Specimen 1 - Fractured skull with C-1 articulated to the occipital condyles. The greater portion of the frontal is in 2 portions and the temporal, a small portion of the is temporal articulating. The entire mandible, except the is mandibular condyle the neck which is shattered, is missing. There is a traumatic fracture of C-1 and C-2.

Specimen 2 - The left arm and hand were found, a small portion of the humerus, the radius, ulna, and the hand. The hand is articulated with the proximal 3/4 of the radius and ulna. There is a heavy musculature development over the hips and upper thigh areas. The proximal 3/4 of the is humerus is articulated at the shoulder. All ribs are present and articulated. The distal extremities of rib bodies are missing. The chest cavity contains the heart and a portion of lung. A portion of liver is noted in the abdominal cavity. The stomach and all abdominal contents are open. The is humerus consisting of the head and 3/4 of the shaft is articulated to the torso.

Specimen 3 - Fractured distal 3/4 of the humerus and extremity.

Specimen 4 - Fractured proximal is radius measured 4 cm.

Specimen 5 - Fractured is knee joint consists of distal is femur (measures 12.6 cm); head and shaft of is tibia (measures 11.5 cm); the head and shaft of is fibula (measures 7.3 cm) and the patella.

Specimen 6 - Fractured is knee consists of the distal is femur (measures 8.5 cm); head and proximal shaft of is tibia (measures approximately 9.5 cm) and the proximal shaft and head of is fibula (measures approximately 8.5 cm).

Kell 11-26-58g

8. Identification Findings:

Specimen 1 - The skull to which is articulated C-1, articulated very well with C-2 which is articulated to cervical spine. The maxilla, housing tooth #1, the lingual root of #2, #10 and #16 is present with #1 and #16 impacted. There is evidence that tooth #3 and #14 are surgically extracted and the alveolar processes are broken over. There are two occlusal enamel fillings on tooth #13. The alveolar process which houses tooth #4, #5, #6, #7, #8, #9, #11, #12, and #15 has been burned away. A small portion of a root apex, either #4 or #7 is present in the broken alveolar process.

2. The dental record completed for Mark Dennis shows two occlusal restorations on tooth #14, completed 10 Oct 57, which is extracted, and since tooth #14 is recorded as having been extracted it can be, 1 yr and 1 mo prior to the time the restorations were alleged to have been placed in tooth #14. The two occlusal restorations are in fact on #15. This error is commonly seen in dental identification because of the extraction of #14, tooth #15 has drifted mesially, and to a degree now occupies the alveolar area formerly retaining tooth #14.

(3) The post mortem dental analysis of the remains is in favorable agreement with SF88, Dental Health Record and the dental radiographs prepared for Mark "D" Dennis.

(4) See page 40, Dental Findings, Col John B. Tarantino, DC, and Lt Col J. L. Koehler, DC, Dental Services Div, USAF Medical Center, HAFB, 11 Feb 71.

(5) The left arm, as seen above, was identified as follows:

Specimen 2 - That specimen 1 (C-1 articulated to the skull) demonstrates good articulation with specimen 2 (C-2 articulated to the spine) proving that specimen 1 and 2 (the torso) are of one individual.

1. The is femur complex associated with the is femur condyles disclose a height measurement of 59.0" (46.8 cm).

(2) This height measurement is comparable with that of Dennis at time of death applying the M'Farlane Trotter-Jeldine G. Gleaser Scale (Height Estimates of Stature from Maximum Lengths of the Sum of Measurements of Long Bone, 1958). The scale allows for an anticipated growth of 1.0 cm in maximum stature from age 17 to 19.5 years. The recorded height on Dennis, 2 Feb 64, was 57" (45.8 cm). Since death occurred 15 Jul 65 or about 2 1/2 years after the 2 Feb 64 measurement, the height of 59.0" (46.8 cm) is established.

(3) From the is femur a specimen of good quality cancellous tissue was extracted. Two separate tests, using the Dr. P. B. Canella absorption techniques, were accomplished on the cancellous bone. Results of these tests disclosed post mortem blood group A. SF88 and SF601 prepared for Mark Dennis list his ante mortem ABO blood group type A. See stch 11.

OF 121

6. Four separate tests, using the Dr. P. B. Canella absorption techniques, were accomplished on good quality muscle, and lung tissue, and brain matter and blood cells contained in a small vein within the lung tissue (all from the torso) disclosed post mortem blood group A. SP68 and SP601 prepared for H-3 Dennis lists his ante mortem ABO blood group type A. See attach 11.

7. The denture Rt. Mm. 12 prob. symphyseal facet demonstrates an estimation age of 20-25 yrs. Although entire teeth were in place, the inferior symphyseal facets which appear at this in high position. Greater surface of the symphyseal facet shows an age ranging from 20 to 25 yrs. Therefore, the ossicles grown must be judged premature because of these factors observed.

Specimen 3 - The scapulae, manubrium proximal Rt humerus morphologically compared very favorably with the articulated Rt humerus, specimen 1.

Specimen 4 - Proximal proximal Rt humerus morphologically in development compares favorably with structure of the distal Rt humerus.

Specimen 5 - Rt knee joint, consisting of the distal Rt femur shaft, condyles, patella and tibia and proximal shaft of fibula morphologically in the opposite member of specimen 1. The Rt knee joint articulation of the distal and proximal shaft of Rt femur is not possible because of the structure of the joint.

Specimen 6 - In knee joint is the opposite member of specimen 5 morphologically and the distal shaft can be demonstrated to articulate accurately with the proximal which is articulated to the torso.

9. Conclusions:

1. That the high and rather narrow nasal bridge; the high nasal bridge; and narrow nasal aperture with minute-like sharpness of the lateral borders are indicative of the Caucasian race. The deceased was Caucasian.

2. That the post mortem dental characteristics of the remains are in very favorable agreement with the ante mortem dental radiographs and SP601, Dental Health Record (beginning date to Jan 64) for H-3 Dennis.

3. That the six Canella absorption tests established the ABO group as type A. Dennis' SP68 and SP601 recorded his ABO group as A.

4. That the established height of 69.0" predicated on the normal growth factor of the late "teens" is in agreement with the projected deceased's height at time of death.

5. That the skeletal and musculature development are those of an individual of medium build, although the hip and thigh region reveals heavy muscle development. SP68 on H-3 Dennis shows his build to be medium.

Rec'd 11/26/80 A-14.

1. That specimens numbered 1 thru 6 (which were applied for the purpose of this report) are the remains of one individual.

10. Summary:

The findings established in this report were directly compared with all statistical data collected on the 43 persons becoming victims in the 15 Jul 68 helicopter disaster in the vicinity of Quang Tri Province, RVN. The conclusion arrived after comprehensive study demonstrated that the remains examined in this report at the Montgomery County Morgue can only be those of H-3 Dennis, 77121-5.

This report was prepared and submitted to the 25 Jul 80 by S. Lugo, 12700 W. 100.

Dear Mr. Gilliam:

Your request for information concerning the service medical record of the late Hospital Corpsman Third Class Mark V. Dennis, U. S. Navy has been forwarded to this Bureau by the Honorable John W. Warner.

Petty Officer Dennis' service medical record fails to show that x-rays were taken of his teeth during October 1965; that he was admitted to the medical facilities at the Naval Support Activity, Da Nang, Republic of Viet Nam for treatment of a virus infection; or that x-ray studies were made of his spine during his period of naval service. Additionally, a search of the organizational files for the Station Hospital, Naval Support Activity, Da Nang has failed to find a record of his having been admitted to that facility during the period of time in question. There is no information in this Bureau to indicate that a DD Form 567 (Record of Recovery of Remains) was prepared in the case of Petty Officer Dennis.

It is regretted we could not be of more assistance to you in this matter. If you would provide us with more definitive information concerning the date and place where Petty Officer Dennis was admitted for treatment of the virus infection or the date and place where x-ray studies were made of his spine we will cause additional searches to be made.

Sincerely,

INTERVIEW OF PILOT
1. On 10 Oct 81, Thomas Christopher MCALLISTER, [REDACTED] Civilian, was interviewed at his residence, [REDACTED]. MCALLISTER furnished a Sworn Statement; Attachment (1), wherein he advised that he was the pilot of the CH46 helicopter that was shot down by hostile forces 15 July 66 near Quang Tri, Republic of Vietnam. MCALLISTER advised that he did not know the individual identities of his passengers at any time, and that after the crash incident, accounting for the casualties was done by persons other than himself. He said he did not know Subj. He also provided three photographs taken by news service photographer Horst FASS (PHONETIC) showing various stages of the descent and subsequent fire. MCALLISTER did not see how it was possible that Subj could have survived the crash. He said they landed within the perimeter defense, and he saw no enemy forces anytime during the incident. In addition to FASS' photographs, MCALLISTER said, he was told that a Japanese cameraman had filmed the entire descent, and that it was later shown on Japanese television news.

STATEMENT

PLACE: [REDACTED]

DATE: 17 OCT 81

A-150

I, Thomas Christopher WALLIVER, make the following free and voluntary statement to Charles T. GABLER Jr. whom I know to be a Special Agent of the United States Naval Investigative Service. I make this statement of my own free will and without any threats made to me or promises extended. I fully understand that this statement is given concerning my knowledge of the events surrounding the death of Mark V. DENNIS, RMJ USN, on 15 Jul 66 in Quang Tri, RVN.

I was the pilot on a UH1H CS-46 helicopter that was shot down by hostile forces on 15 Jul 66 near Quang Tri, RVN. There were four members of the crew: myself, co-pilot RICHIE, crew chief TELFER (who was killed that day) and side gunner LUCAS.

A group of marines had called for reinforcement. They were surrounded by a division of North Vietnamese soldiers. The marines were in a valley and the enemy were on the ridges surrounding it. They were probably 4 to 5 miles away. There were at least four aircraft in my flight. I was the second one in. We picked up a group of marines at Dong Ha. I think there were 12 altogether. I cannot be sure of this number. I was only concerned with the weight and the fuel load. I never knew who the passengers were individually. It was necessary to leave the rear ramp partially descended in flight, because it took too long to lower on the ground, increasing our vulnerability.

As we started our descent to the landing zone (LZ) I was approximately 1000 to 1500 feet of altitude when we were hit, probably by .50 cal machine-gun fire. This was almost simultaneous with the squadron commander's order to leave the area. In just a few seconds, our stubbing fuel tank was hit and ruptured, probably by tracer bullets. Burning fuel was immediately sucked into the passenger compartment, probably through the partially-open rear ramp. The fire and smoke came all the way forward to the cockpit, injuring my eyes and temporarily depriving me of my sight. I still had control of the aircraft, and immediately decided to land and try to evacuate. The descent took about 30 to 60 seconds. The gunner LUCAS stood in the opening of the cockpit and blocked most of the fire with his back. The guys in the compartment were trapped and could not escape.

We landed hard on a gentle hillside and the aircraft capsized on its right side, in so doing, it killed TELFER, who had jumped out. I was momentarily pinned in the cockpit but managed to free myself and exit. RICHIE exited by the co-pilot's emergency hatch, followed by me. LUCAS went back into the compartment to see if anyone there could be helped. He told me later he saw no one alive, so he got out. We walked a short distance up the hill and within 1 to 3 minutes the aircraft exploded and burned for several hours. I saw no one else exit the aircraft. In all likelihood, they were already dead when the craft hit the ground.

We landed within the marines' perimeter. I did not see any enemy forces during the entire ordeal. We were immediately taken to the aid station. A-151 The balance of the flight returned to Dong Ha and there the accounting of the casualties took place. I never had a direct part of this accounting.

REFORM 8186-81

STATEMENT OF THOMAS CHRISTOPHER WALLIVER OF 10 OCTOBER 1981

While I cannot state that it was impossible for DENNIS to survive, I can say that the possibility is extremely remote. He had no chance to escape after the crash because LUCAS would have seen him. If he had fallen or jumped from the craft before the crash, either he would have been killed in the fall or the fall would have been photographed. Horst FAHS of UPI took still photos of the entire descent. I have lent my copies of these photos to Mr. GABLER today. The negatives probably still exist. Also, I was also told at the time that a Japanese newsmen had taken movie film of the descent and crash. I was told it was shown on Japanese television.

All I can say is that if Mark DENNIS was in that aircraft, I do not see how he could have survived. I have no explanation for the discrepancies in the autopsies. LUCAS was the one who had direct contact with the passengers during the flight and the crash incident. I understand that RICHIE was killed several years ago in an accident.

I can provide no further information pertinent to this investigation.

I have read, understood, and initialled all corrections in the above statement, and it is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

INTERVIEW OF CRASH WITNESS

1. MARTIN ("MIKE") A. WEENICK, [REDACTED] WHO RESIDES AT [REDACTED], WAS INTERVIEWED AT HIS PLACE OF EMPLOYMENT, [REDACTED].

ON 26 AUG 1971, WEENICK SERVED A 15-MONTH TOUR OF DUTY IN VIETNAM IN 1965-66 AS A SCOUT FOR M2 COMPANY, 3RD BATTALION, 4TH MARINES, 3RD MARINE DIVISION.

2. WHILE PARTICIPATING IN "OPERATION HASTINGS" IN QUANG TRI PROVINCE, RVN, IN MID-JULY 1965, WEENICK'S BATTALION WAS HEAVY IN ON ALL SIDES BY THE ENEMY, HAD TAKEN HEAVY LOSSES, AND WAS WAITING FOR A REINFORCEMENT BATTALION TO BE FLOWN IN. WEENICK SAID HE HAD DUG A HOLE FOR HIMSELF AT THE END OF A GULLEY WHERE NUMEROUS OTHER PERSONNEL HAD ALSO DUG IN TO AVOID MORTAR FIRE BEING DIRECTED AT THEM FROM ALL DIRECTIONS. IN THE DISTANCE, WEENICK COULD SEE AND HEAR ABOUT FIVE OR SIX HELICOPTERS COMING UP THE VALLEY TOWARD THEM, PRESUMABLY WITH REINFORCEMENTS. HE OPINED THEY WERE FLYING 300-350 FEET ABOVE TREE TOP LEVEL, WHEN ONE OF THE FRONT HELOS WAS STRUCK BY ENEMY FIRE. WEENICK NOTED THAT IT WAS EASY FOR HIM TO FOLLOW THE LINE OF SILVER TRACERS AND MACHINE GUN FIRE BACK TO THE ENEMY GUN EMPLACEMENT ON THE SIDE OF THE HILL. AS A RESULT OF THE HEAVY FIRE AND THE HIT SCORED ON ONE OF THEIR CRAFT, THE REMAINING HELICOPTERS TURNED BACK.

3. WEENICK RECALLED THAT WHEN HE SAW THE HELICOPTER GET HIT, IT IMMEDIATELY FELL TO TREE-TOP LEVEL (40') AT ABOUT 1/3 MILE FROM WEENICK'S POSITION. SOMETHING APPEARED TO FLY OUT OF THE CRAFT WHEN IT SETTLED AT TREE TOP ALTITUDE, BUT WEENICK OPINED IT WAS A PIECE OF THE PLANE RATHER THAN A PERSON. THE CRAFT STILL SEEMED TO BE UNDER CONTROL BY THE PILOT WHO APPEARED TO SPOT THE AREA WHERE WEENICK AND OTHERS WERE DUG IN AS A POSSIBLE PLACE TO SET THE CRAFT DOWN. AS THE HELO GOT CLOSER, WEENICK BECAME AFRAID THAT IT WOULD SETTLE RIGHT ON TOP OF HIM. HE WAS ABLE TO SEE THE PILOT LEANING OUT THE WINDOW, AS IF FROM A SMOKE FILLED COCKPIT, IN ORDER TO JUDGE HIS LANDING. HE ALSO NOTED THAT FLAMES APPEARED TO BE HEAVY IN THE REAR SECTION OF THE CRAFT ALTHOUGH HAD NOT YET BROKEN THROUGH THE SKIN OF THE HELO. AS THE CRAFT HOVERED TO ITS POSITION IN THE AREA OF WEENICK, HE SAID HE COULD SEE IT WAS WEENICK/YAING FROM SIDE TO SIDE. HE SCRAMBLED OUT OF HIS HOLE AS THE CRAFT GOT CLOSER TO HIS POSITION AND RAN DOWN THE SIDE OF THE HILL, HEARING A MINOR IMPACT BEHIND HIM AS HE RAN. WEENICK SAID PROP PARTS FLEW PAST HIM AND HE SHORTLY HEARD A LARGE EXPLOSION. BEFORE THE EXPLOSION HE WAS ABLE TO SEE AT LEAST ONE PERSON, NOT IN COMBAT DRESS, BADLY BURNED, EXITING THE FRONT END OF THE CRAFT. LATER, WHEN VOLUNTEERS WERE SOLICITED TO REMOVE THE BODIES, WEENICK VOLUNTEERED ALONG WITH 5-10 OTHERS. PROBABLY ONLY TWO OF THE VICTIMS WERE RECOGNIZABLE, ONE OF THOSE BEING A LIGHT-SKINNED BLACK MALE WHOSE BODY FROM THE WAIST DOWN WAS GONE. THAT WAS THE ONLY PERSON WEENICK COULD RECALL WHO WAS WEARING DOG-TAGS. FURTHERMORE, THE HELICOPTER WAS FROM A DIFFERENT USMC BATTALION THAN HIS OWN SO HE WAS NOT KNOWLEDGEABLE ABOUT THE IDENTITY OF THOSE ABOARD, OR HOW MANY WERE ABOARD.

4. A SHORT TIME AFTER "OPERATION HASTINGS" AND WEENICK'S DEPARTURE FROM VIETNAM, AN ARTICLE ON THAT OPERATION WAS PUBLISHED IN "STARS AND STRIPES." ASSOCIATED WITH THE ARTICLE WAS A PHOTOGRAPH SHOWING A DAMAGED HELICOPTER SETTLING TO A LANDING, WITH THREE PERSONS BURNING FROM THE AREA. WEENICK SAID ONE OF THOSE PERSONS WAS HIM; HE DID NOT KNOW THE IDENTITY OF THE OTHER TWO. HE KEPT THE ARTICLE AND HAS IT IN A SCRAPBOOK OF VIETNAM WAR REMOIRS.

5. ON SATURDAY, 2 MAY 1931, WEENICK WAS STRUCK BY AN ARTICLE ON PAGE 12A OF THAT DAY'S EDITION OF THE ST. PETERSBURG EVENING INDEPENDENT. THE ARTICLE TOLD OF THE SEARCH BY JERRY DENNIS OF PALM HARBOR, FL FOR EYEWITNESSES TO A HELICOPTER CRASH IN VIETNAM IN WHICH HIS BROTHER (SUBJ) WAS KILLED. THE SAME PHOTO OF THE HELICOPTER THAT HAD APPEARED IN STARS AND STRIPES SOME FIFTEEN YEARS EARLIER WAS PART OF THE ARTICLE AND IMMEDIATELY CAUGHT WEENICK'S EYE. HE TELEPHONED JERRY DENNIS, AND SINCE THAT TIME THEY HAVE MET PERSONALLY SEVERAL TIMES. WEENICK'S SCRAPBOOK IS PRESENTLY ON LOAN TO JERRY DENNIS.

6. WEENICK WAS OF THE OPINION THAT TWO OPPORTUNITIES EXISTED FOR A PERSON TO EXIT THE HELICOPTER AFTER IT WAS STRUCK BY ENEMY FIRE. HE FIRST WOULD HAVE BEEN AFTER THE CRAFT HAD FALLEN TO TREE TOP LEVEL; SOMEONE, ESPECIALLY A CORPSMAN WHOSE POSITION IS RIGHT NEXT TO THE EXIT, COULD HAVE JUMPED FROM THAT 30 OR 40 FOOT ALTITUDE. WEENICK ACKNOWLEDGED HE DID NOT SEE ANYONE JUMP, BUT DID NOT DISCOUNT THE POSSIBILITY THAT SOMEONE HAD. IF THAT IN FACT HAD HAPPENED, HE PERSON WOULD HAVE LANDED IN A DRY CREEK BED IN ABOUT A FOOT OF SOFT SAND. INJURY WAS POSSIBLE, BUT FOREMOST WEENICK SAID THAT AREA WAS ALL UNDER CONTROL OF THE ENEMY AND THE JUMPER WOULD HAVE IMMEDIATELY BEEN KILLED OR CAPTURED. THE SECOND POSSIBILITY OF DEPARTURE FROM THE AIRCRAFT WOULD HAVE BEEN AFTER THE PLANE SETTLED TO ITS LANDING POSITION. ALTHOUGH WEENICK SAID ONLY THE ONE PERSON, HE DEEMED IT POSSIBLE THAT A PERSON COULD HAVE EXITED ONE OF THE HELICOPTER DOORS SEEN TO HIM AND WANDERED THROUGH DISORIENTATION OR CONFUSION INTO

INTERVIEW OF CAPT G. A. LUCAS

1. CAPT Gary Alan LUCAS (Vice LUCAS), [REDACTED], MHS Supply, Marine Corps Air Station, Yuma, AZ was interviewed on 2 October 1981 in an effort to obtain additional details of Subj's reported demise in a helicopter crash in Vietnam on 15 July 1966. He said the incident occurred during an operation identified as "HASTINGS" when additional troops were being taken into an area just north of Quang Tri Province to reinforce troops there that had been overrun. He stated that he was part of a four (4) man crew on the helicopter which was shot down by hostile ground forces, and he identified the other three members of the crew as: Thomas C. MCALISTER (pilot); George C. RICHIEY (Co-pilot); and the crewchief (NFI). In addition, there were twelve (12) combat-ready troops on the helicopter, whose names were unknown to the crew, or a total of sixteen persons. The pilot, co-pilot, and himself were the only survivors to the best of his knowledge, and a total of thirteen (13) persons perished as opposed to eleven (11) as previously reported. CAPT LUCAS said that he saw two (2) individuals jump from the aircraft, on fire, prior to the crash and assumed they were killed. He did not know Subj and indicated he had no way of knowing if he was one of the twelve troops they were carrying when the helicopter was shot down. He further advised that an article covering the incident had later appeared in the 1 August 1966 edition of Newsweek Magazine with pictures captioned by the name "Horse FAAS" - Associated Press. He provided a copy of the article (Atch (1)) and was of the opinion that possibly FAAS or Newsweek Magazine could provide additional photographs or data that might be of assistance. CAPT LUCAS said he had been knocked unconscious for a period of time when the helicopter crashed. His statement is Atch (2).

I, CAPT Gary Alan LUCKS, USMC, hereby make the following voluntary statement to Mr. Frank E. FIEGER who has identified himself to me as a Special Agent of the U. S. Naval Investigative Service:

I, enlisted in the USMC in May 1959 and I am presently assigned to HENS Supply, MCAS Yuma, Arizona. Mr. FIEGER has asked me to provide details and what information I can regarding a an incident that occurred in Vietnam in an area just north of Quang Tri Province and south of the DMZ on 15 Jul 1966 when the USMC CH-46 helicopter I was in was shot down by hostile forces ground fire. I understand that one of the persons who perished as a result of the incident was 1st Mark V. DENNIS, 282-42-1904; however, I did not specifically know that person by name. On the day in question, I was assigned to the CH-46 helicopter in question as a door gunner with MW-265 attached to MAG-16 operating out of Marble Mountain in Danang. We were involved in operations Hastings and we were moving combat troops to engage North Vietnamese regulars which was the first encounter with these troops in the Vietnam War. At around 1600 that day, we were advised that there was a company being overrun and that we were going to take in additional troops to reinforce the troops that were there. The CH-46 was loaded with twelve (12) combat ready troops in addition myself, the crewchief, the pilot and copilot. There were sixteen individuals on the helicopter. After we departed, we were in the air for about thirty (30) minutes on our way to the landing zone, when the pilot informed the crewchief and myself that the zone was coming up and it was "hot". About this time we were hit in the starboard fuel cell with an incendiary round and immediately caught fire. The flames were about waist high moving forward and aft in the cabin and the smoke was so bad no one could see. The pilot was notified that we had been hit and he immediately started to descend to the landing zone. When we were about 1500 - 1800 feet, I overheard conversation between the pilot and copilot indicating that they were unable to see. I unhooked my safety harness and glanced toward the rear of the aircraft. I saw an individual run off the aft ramp of the helicopter and his clothing was smoking. I assume he ran out of the aircraft because of the intense heat and was killed upon impact with the ground as we were still around 1200 feet in the air. As the helicopter progressed toward the landing zone and was at an elevation of about three-hundred feet (300), we were still on fire and went into a hard right bank and I saw a second man jump from the aircraft. He was on fire at the time. Shortly after that, we hit the ground and I always felt the aircraft probably fell on that man. As far as I know, his body was never found. We hit the ground with the helicopter on it's starboard side. I was knocked unconscious on impact. When I came to, I noticed that the pilot and copilot had exited the aircraft. I found out later that some of our forces on a nearby hill rescued from the aircraft. I then checked to see if there were any other survivors in the aircraft. I found that the crewchief was still alive but his leg from the knee down was pinned between the aircraft and ground and he had also been hit by a round. When I was attempting to pull him free, he was hit by other rounds in the back and died. Some ammunition from our own aircraft was exploding. Everyone else on the helicopter was still strapped in their seats and their bodies were burned beyond recognition. They were sitting right over the fuel tanks and the rear third of the aircraft was like an incinerator. I left the aircraft and the landing zone and moved into the bush toward our troops. Around thirty minutes later, I came to an outpost and they took me to the top of the hill and administered emergency first aid. Around noon the next day, I was medicated out.

That is all the recollection I have of the incident except that later in the hospital, I met an individual whose name I do not know that told me he had been with the troops on the hill nearby and saw one of the men jump from the helicopter. In this type operation, we were just moving troops and we were only concerned about the number of people on the aircraft. We had no knowledge of who they were individually. I have no way of knowing if 1st Mark DENNIS was in our helicopter when this incident occurred or not. I can specifically say that there was a four (4) man crew and twelve (12) passengers on the helicopter at the time. I found out later that there was a Newsweek magazine correspondent at the scene identified as Horst FAAS and an article covering the incident with our helicopter later appeared in the 1 August 1966 edition of the magazine. In the article, pictures taken at the scene have the name Horst FAAS-Associated Press inscribed underneath the pictures. Possibly FAAS or Newsweek magazine could provide additional data or photographs that might be of assistance. If 1st Mark DENNIS was in fact on the aircraft, and if he was one of the two individuals that jumped out, it is highly unlikely that he would have survived. This is what I recall of the incident to the best of my recollection. I have read the completed statement and corrected all errors.

Congressman Bill McCollum
1801 Lee Road
Winter Park, FL 32789

Dear Bill,

Thank you for your continued interest in obtaining the facts surrounding the disappearance of my brother, Mark V. Dennis, and the identity of the remains we received.

Dr. Michael Charney has completed his report (copy enclosed). The report basically agrees with the report completed by Dr. Raymond Bony from the Ohio State University in 1971. Both reports indicate the remains cannot be those of Mark.

Mr. John Rogers, of the Naval Medical Command (201-655-1343), has indicated to me that after reviewing Dr. Charney's report he will call me and probably recommend that I request the Navy pick up the remains to reprocess them through CIL HT. There is no indication, at this time, that the remains will be processed as anything other than Mark Dennis.

I do not intend to allow the U.S. Government to regain control of these remains and bury them as Mark Dennis in Arlington. I do want to cooperate with them in hopes, after all these years, that the Navy will admit the misidentification.

I am asking, once again, for your assistance. The remains have been reduced to skeleton and are presently at CSU in Ft. Collins, Colorado. Mr. Rogers visited Dr. Charney's lab and has viewed the remains. The skeleton was destroyed due to the decaying of the remains. I request your office request me to arrange the following:

1. Request the U.S. Navy reprocess the remains through CIL HT lab.
2. The Navy may transport such remains as they choose; no casket is required by me.

3. The Navy shall package the remains in such a way to prevent any further damage to them as the skull is in a delicate condition.
 4. Your office, and I, shall receive a copy of all identification papers, notes and final results from CIL HI.
 5. The remains shall be returned to me at the above address. All expenses shall be the Navy's.
- A. In the event CIL HI determines the remains are identified as a missing U.S. serviceman, the Navy shall notify me, via your office, for determination of disposition of such remains but shall not assume possession of such remains until the status of Mark V. Dennis is resolved to my satisfaction.

I contacted Congressman C.W. "Bill" Young's office to notify them of my request to you since I now live in Bill's District. I talked to both Harry Glen (202-225-59610 in D.C. and George Cretakos (813-381-0980) in Larko. Congressman Young's office stated he definitely wanted to assist you and would contact you directly. Since Bill is on the Appropriations Committee for the Secretary of the Navy and meets with him on a regular basis, his office feels he will receive an open ear to any discussion on this case. His office is also a few blocks from my home. He did state they would honor my request that you handle the case with their assistance.

Thank you for your continued interest, once again:

Sincerely,

Jerry L. Dennis

Dear Mr. Dennis:

Please accept this report on the decomposed, partial human remains with the Number TU 3 Army 3581-66", identified as those of one Mark V. Dennis, U.S. Navy. The remains were received 29 August 1987.

Abstract: A male, 24 ± 3 years, 5 feet 4.5 ± 1.3 inches, 185 ± 5 pounds. The facial affinity cannot be determined. No anomalies are to be seen. The large degree of pathology due to violence and burning will not be included in this report. One tooth of African descent shows restoration.

Summary Data for the Above

Sex: the sub-public angle is 66° (less than 90° is considered male). The skull is badly destroyed but shows a large mastoid process (left) and the nuchal area of the occipital bone is rough indicating heavy neck musculature. The osseum is long, narrow and highly curved. All the teeth are big, heavy, dense.

Age: The faces of the pubic symphysis yield the following ages by three pubic symphysis age scale:

Shelagh T. Brooks: Phase IV - 24 to 26 years
T. Wingate Todd: Phase 3 - 22 to 24 years
McKern-Stewart: 4-3-1 - 22 to 28 years

The centrum of the vertebral bones are completely fused - 25 years
The scapula is dense indicating an age in the early 20's

Height: all the long bones that serve for estimating height are broken with only one, the left femur, having the broken parts present. From the stature regression formulas of Trotter and Gleser: (Femur = 44.3 cm)

$2.3 \times \text{Femur} + 61.41 \pm 3.27 = \text{height in cm}$
 $2.3 \times 44.3 + 61.41 = 163.3 \text{ cm}$
 $= 64.29 \text{ inches} \pm 1.3 \text{ inches}$
 $= 5 \text{ feet } 4.5 \text{ inches} \pm 1.3 \text{ inches}$

Weight: an estimate of 185 ± 5 pounds is based on the size, density of the bones and the muscle markings.

Race: what is left of the skull is not enough to reach any definite conclusion as to race. The extreme fore-and-aft bowing of the femur (L1) height of the curve is 4.7 cm to the posterior surface with the two condyles on the table. This occurred 10 cm from the distal end. 3.0 to 3.5 cm would appear to be average for caucasoid femurs. This degree of bowing of the femur is more characteristic of people of mongoloid race and with the short stature might indicate one of mongoloid racial affinity. However, this is not enough to draw such a conclusion. Extra bowing, making for a "bow-legged" person is not unknown in tall caucasoid even those 6 feet 2 and 6 feet 3 inches.

Pathology: tooth #18 two separate occlusal restorations-analogs.

There is no mandible and the alveolar ridge of the maxilla is mostly missing. From what is left of the maxillary alveolar ridge it would appear that teeth numbers 2, 3 and 4 were missing antemortem. It is also possible that #1 was either missing or had never even into the space of #2 when it was removed. The area at #14 is open and spongy, but it would appear that the tooth had been removed antemortem. Tooth number 15 that shows two occlusal restorations is not well-matched with a dental radiograph of that tooth in a 1964 antemortem of Mark Dennis. This radiograph shows decay in the distal pit and possibly in the central pit, but it is not positive. The central occlusal restorat is not a "pit" but far more extensive. B & recording?

The 1964 antemortem radiograph of Mark shows #14 with a large decay are. The radiograph of 1965 shows this tooth had been removed.

The angling of the antemortem radiographs make the root morphology not good for matching.

In all, what is left of the dentition of this case and its matching with the antemortem picture does not help to either include or exclude a positive identification.

Summation

Mark Dennis at 16 years is listed as being 5feet10 inches and 154 pounds from the high school records. Photographs of Mark alongside his sister Eileen in plate standing at 5feet10 inches, show Mark to be taller. It is almost certain that some growth would have taken place from this to his age at almost 20 years when he is presumed to have died. It is not easy to determine if Mark was bow-legged from the two photographs I have as he is standing with feet spread apart, but he does not appear to be bow-legged. One in his Marine uniform shows the trouser hanging straight. The family says he was not bow-legged. The person represented by these remains is most definitely bow-legged and too far off the height and weight of Mark.

All measurements and observations are on file and available upon request.

faithfully,

Michael Sharney

SUMMARY OF EVENTS IN CASE OF
MARK V. DENNIS, DECEASED

A-164

I. Background information - Vietnam 1966

Mark, at his demise, was a Navy corpsman assigned to the 1st platoon, Co. E, 2nd BN, 1st MAR, 1st MARDIV, for duty. His transfer to this assignment was effective 25 May 1966. On 15 JULY 1966, his company was designated to provide support for other military units in an operation of large proportions in Quang Tri Province. Ten helicopters provided Co. E transportation to a valley destination near the DMZ. A company muster was made prior to departing Dong Ha, the marine base camp location. The helicopter in question was known to carry sixteen personnel, as verified by the pilot. The pilot, co-pilot, and gunner survived, the crew and the twelve passengers were fatally injured. The combat troops aboard were fully equipped for their mission, which included carrying live hand grenades. On approach to the destination landing zone at approx. 1/2 mi distant and at 1000 - 1500 ft altitude (information provided by pilot) the helicopter received enemy anti-aircraft fire and commenced burning. The only object known to depart the aircraft was an emergency escape hatch jettisoned by the co-pilot. The sloping terrain at point of landing, even though landing in upright position, caused the helicopter to overturn. In this position, the aircraft was located in a mortar emplacement area manned by friendly troops, who immediately converged to assist in rescue efforts. However, the explosions occurring aboard the helicopter precluded an immediate recovery, but ultimately all remains were removed. Immediately after the incident, helicopters transporting other company "E" members returned to Dong Ha for re-muster, thus personnel aboard the downed helicopter were known by name. And certified as being aboard by C.O. of Co. E. Subsequent to removal of remains from the Dong Ha area to the division field hospital at Da Nang, processing for individual identification and preparation of the certificates of death was accomplished. The reverse side of certificates, prepared for each individual, recorded data regarding circumstances and the method of identification (A majority by dental comparison) made at Da Nang. USA mortuary TSNA Saigon confirmed identifications made by use of all ID media available including a comparison of physical characteristics. After identity was confirmed, the remains were (embalmed) prepared for movement to CONUS. The Commanding Officer, Co. E transmitted a letter of condolence dtd 28 JULY 1966, only after ascertaining Mark's whereabouts and determining beyond all reasonable doubt he was aboard the helicopter which crashed, providing briefly the circumstances of death to the Dennis family.

II. Inquiries received - from the Dennis family - 1970-1971

The initial inquiry made to BUNAVPERS concerned the Dennis family's identification of a POW picture which appeared in 30 NOV 1970, issue of Newsweek magazine, as Mark. BUNAVPERS letter dated 19 JAN 71 to Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Dennis identified the subject in the photograph by name and further provided information that he had written to his family on numerous occasions as prisoner of the NVA. On 10 MAY 1971, Naval Personnel (OLA - BUREAU - BUPERS) met with Mr. Jerry Dennis to discuss POW picture identification and to assist by providing other information requested. POW picture identification discussion was terminated by Mr. Dennis in apparent acceptance of identity as provided by BUMAVPERS. Discussion was readressed to circumstances of the crash and information provided to him, by unidentified persons, inconsistent with Navy reports, were briefly as follows:

- a. the burning aircraft was being abandon in flight by passengers
- b. two persons were missing
- c. none of the remains could be identified
- d. the aircraft exploded in mid-air prior to crash
- e. that because of the circumstances indicated above Mark could be a POW

BUMED provided to Mr. Dennis the following information:

- a. the only object observed and known to have departed the helicopter prior to landing was an emergency hatch, intentionally released by the co-pilot for easy exit.
- b. no personnel were reported missing, three aircraft crew members survived.
- c. all remains were recovered, name associations provided at Dong Ha and identified at Div. field hospital at DaNang. Identification was confirmed at USA mortuary, TSN, AB, Saigon. Mark was ID at DaNang, according to annotations made, by a process of elimination. In a aircraft incident this may be considered as good circumstantial evidence, since an immediate accounting provided the names of personnel aboard. However, TSN mortuary records indicate identification by (ID procedures) comparison of physical characteristics, was accomplished.
- d. the pilot reported that no major explosions occurred aboard the helicopter until after landing and the time required for he and the co-pilot to exit the aircraft and evacuate the immediate area.

The proposal made to Mr. Dennis at the conclusion of the meeting was that BUMED would direct and fund exhumation and re-identification of Mark's remains on presentation of competent evidence which would rebut identification made following Mark's death. No evidence was presented therefore, no action was taken.

III. BUMED ACTION

We were advised by OLA on 12 July 1971, that Jerry Dennis had exhumed Mark's remains on the previous Friday and had re-buried them. However, the skull was detached and retained at the coroners office. Examination of the remains reportedly was made by the coroners physician and three coroner, non medical, investigative personnel. Conclusions made by them relate to an appearance of the skull and vertebral column as being small for Mark. This observation may account for assumptions made by Jerry, in his call made to the White House, reporting that the remains in casket were Vietnamese, not Mark. A request for Mark's dental records was received by Congr Powell's letter dtd 14 July. The BUMED representative hand carried Mark's records to Dayton, Ohio on 20 July for possible comparison with dental criteria remaining in the skull. Upon receiving Mr. Dennis' statement that identification by dental comparison would be unacceptable without BUMED locating an x-ray, showing restorations made on 10-8-65 which supposedly was taken at Camp Lejeune during Mark's assignment to that activity; and our inability to produce such radiographic evidence, if indeed an x-ray was made, resulted in arrangements for exhumation of the remains. BUMED scheduled HQ AFLC identification specialists to examine the remains on Wednesday 21 July and ^{by Angel Curator of} the Physical Anthropologist, Smithsonian Institution to examine the remains on Thursday 22 July 1971. Since the skull was available, having been retained at the coroners office, dental criteria was clinically and radiographically examined by dentists at WPAFB medical center on Wednesday morning, a report of their findings was provided.

IV. Tests and examination conclusions released to news media

Tests were conducted on three metal specimens, found in Mark's casket, by the Papucci Laboratories, Inc., Cincinnati, Ohio and copies of these reports were provided. The metal specimen tested and comments made by report are as follows:

- a. a metal identification tag for Mark found on his remains in the casket. Comments made appear to disprove it's association with the helicopter fire. Under report conclusions the following statement was made, "the surface of the tag could have been prepared merely by igniting a match with some cellulose (paper) present to indicate a surface action of the material".
- b. a metal fragment identified as part of the firing mechanism of a hand grenade. Comment made, "it is difficult to understand how a grenade fragment was exploded on an above ground surface helicopter"
- c. a metal specimen identified as a piece of corroded aluminium tubing.

No pertinent comments made.

Statements of Roland A. Papucci, PHD, Papucci Testing Laboratories, Inc., Cincinnati, Ohio, and Raymond Baby, Archeologist, Ohio State University, are as follows:

- a. "the dog tags on the body which bear Dennis' name could not have been in the same fire which consumed the body." A-167

- b. References made to information released by Navy indicating Mark's identification was made by fingerprint comparisons, encouraged such statements as-how is this possible when only the upper forearm was left and "there are no hands in the casket." "You can't take fingerprints without the hand tissue."
- c. "The two scientists said there also are just too many other discrepancies in the body size and details of the crash to believe the body is Mark's." A height of between 5' 3-1/2" and 5' 4" was concluded.
- d. Dr. Papucci reported "I have found traces of tetraethyl lead in the femur (thigh bone) and the skull that could have come only from gasoline". Helicopters use what is called JP-4 or jet fuel and it does not contain any lead.
- e. A newspaper article quoting Dr. Papucci, referred to his comment as follows: "He speculated that the body was killed in ground action because he found a firing mechanism from a hand grenade in the skull and grenade fragments in the body."
- f. Dr. Papucci stated "I want to make it clear that I have had no contact with Baby, yet we have arrived at the same conclusion; the body is not that of Mark Dennis."

V. Comments in rebuttal

It is believed that the tests conducted on the three metal specimens were made primarily to justify a statement made in Dennis family ltr dtd 29 Jan 71, as follows: "It is our feeling that all the boys in this explosion whose dog tags were not recovered should be put on the MIA list."

A-170

as no bodies could be identified." Comments made on the report of test appear to disprove its association with the fire. We do not consider presence of the "dog tag" as conclusive evidence of ID of the remains and have stated this viewpoint in letters which the Dennis' have received.

Statements of Dr. R. Papucci, and Dr. R. Baby, are designated alphabetically. Our response is so designated.

- a. BUMED ltr to Congr Powell dtd 18 Mar 71 commented that the presence of the metal identification tag on a remains constitutes supportive, not conclusive evidence of identity.
- b. The letter of 1st March 71, also advised that no fingerprint impressions were obtainable and identification could not be confirmed by this method.
- c. We are not aware of receipt of a report made on Exam of remains from Dr. Papucci or Dr. Baby. Therefore, we do not know procedures they used to determine Mark's height. We are aware that in reports received from the experts we retained that the bone measured is identified, the length of that bone is given in centimeters and inches and the conversion scale used is identified. The Physical-anthropologist determined stature at between 5' 7" and 5' 9" qualified by a report of trunk length at well over 90 cm suggesting a long trunk. The Hg. AFLC report indicated height was calculated at 69.0".
- d. We do not question the feasibility of such test and results he may have attained but without knowledge of specific location of lead residue which may have been found in the bone we are unable to comment. However, we do not feel this test has any bearing on the identification of the remains performed at Dayton, Ohio.

- e. Reports of Marks Death, verified by C. O., reports of a company muster and re-muster placed Mark aboard the helicopter. Therefore, we agree with the news reporter, this is speculation. Also, live hand grenades were carried by combat troops aboard the helicopter and it is feasible to assume that anti-aircraft fire, burning of the aircraft or subsequent explosions may have detonated the grenades.
- f. Without knowledge of military procedures used in accountability of personnel and of the methods employed to identify the other personnel who expired in this accident; and unaware of the USA mortuary procedures utilized to confirm the ID made at Division Field Hospital DaNang, it is difficult to understand how a negative determination concerning Mark's identification can be so conclusively stated. It appears, without benefit of Navy circumstance reports and medical records to serve as a basis for comparisons made, their conclusions may be based on hear-say or presumptive evidence. Therefore, we cannot seriously consider "speculations" made concerning circumstances of Mark's death or identification and conclude that circumstantial evidence is so overwhelming as to overcome presumptive evidence presented in news articles.

VI. Conclusive observations

It has been noted in review of this case that there is a persistent request which has appeared in every letter received from the Dennis family, an insistence to change Mark's status to MIA, which by efforts expended and non-acceptance of Navy information provided, they appear to support. This ^{A-16} is not totally evident however, since they have not relinquished Mark's remains to Navy, but have re-buried his remains under their custody. The numerous inquiries received after publication of articles, before receipt of our letter by family, concerning the identification of Mark from reporters to counter definitive points made by Dr. Papucci and Dr. Baby, put us in a very difficult position. Therefore, information was provided in generalities, confirming Mark's identification which may have been less than desired by them and may have appeared, at that time, to be detrimental to the Navy image. However, it was our desire that the Dennis family receive our correspondence via their Congressman and respond amiably to us. We did not desire that disagreements be aired ^{with} family through the press media. We would consider such discussions highly inappropriate, unethical and not conducive to continuing efforts to assist them. However, by accounts appearing in a Dayton newspaper dtd 20 Aug 71, it appears the family may have failed to exercise the same type restraint and consideration. In the overall picture information obtained regarding circumstances by report and in telecon with C.O.'s of Co. E, and the C.O. of the aircraft, support circumstance reports of the incident involving Mark. The identification made at Dayton recently support the findings made in 1966, concerning identification of Mark. Information which compares with Mark's medical record data is as follows:

- a. Dental comparison - very favorably - a distinctive impacted (unerupted), extraction and restoration pattern of maxillary molars
- b. HT - 69" Record indicates height at 67 1/4" on 2-4-64 (DOB 9-21-46) at induction into Naval service. The growth factor from age 17-1/3 yrs to 19-3/4 yrs (at his demise) is considered feasible and acceptable.
- c. Race - caucasian - confirmed on both reports.

- d. Blood type "A" - confirmed.
- e. Medium build - medium build determined except for long vertebral column and, as acknowledged by Jerry, heavy hiped. ^{A-17}

VII. BUMED Conclusions and position

BUMED conclusions and position concerning the identification of Mark V. Dennis, were submitted to Congressman Powell in ltr dtd 20 Aug 71, with signed reports of the independent examinations made, as enclosures. Excerpts are provided for information and emphasis as follows; in view of comparisons made of Mark's remains to his medical records, the opinions of the identification experts, and the absence of competent evidence to the contrary, it is the conclusion of this office that the remains in question are indeed those of Mark V. Dennis. It is our position that proper identification was made in July 1966, and that this most recent effort serves only to substantiate the view held by this office since the date of Mark's initial identification. We would urge that the evidence be viewed as objectively as possible in that there is a conclusiveness in the findings which would be most difficult to overcome. Should Mark's parents desire to persist in a denial that the remains are not their son's we will upon a written, notarized request, remove the remains to a National Cemetery for re-interment. The grave, we must insist, will bear a marker, identifying it as the resting place of Mark V. Dennis.

VIII. Other Action

We are aware that BuNavPers is preparing a response to a request the Dennis family submitted to Senator Saxby for convening a board of inquiry to review Mark's case. It appears the request will be declined based on the assumption that proposals which may be made will be unacceptable to the family, if it concerns their acceptance of Mark's death.

CILHI 0055-88 CASE REVIEW

I have reviewed the documentation on CILHI 0055-88 and have examined the skeletal remains presently associated with that case. These remains have been identified as those of HPM MARK V DENNIS. The first identification was made by exclusion at the USA mortuary, TSN, AB, Saigon. Roll calls immediately before the flight and immediately after the crash clearly identified the man of the unit who were lost. HPM DENNIS was the only casualty not identified by dental and/or identification tags at the initial investigation.

The remains were exhumed in July 1971 for an examination by a coroner's physician and other personnel. No written report by that examination is present in the file. The remains were exhumed again (the cranial remains had been retained by the coroner's office) that same month when they were examined by HQ AFPC identification specialists and dentists at the WPAFB medical center. At that time, they were independently examined by J. Lawrence Angel, Ph.D., curator at the USNH.

Comments by Raymond Baby, Ph.D. (an archeologist who has worked with Amerindian burials and cremated bone), contained in the file material, suggested the remains were too short (they noted a range of around 63.5 to 64 inches). This reviewer has no confidence in stature estimates obtained from a burned body, still fleshed, that was lacking the lower portions of the arms and legs, and where all other long bones were fractured.

The identification specialists and Dr. Angel found good consistency between the known information on HPM DENNIS and the human remains. It is interesting to note that Dr. Angel apparently thought that HPM DENNIS was 17 years old at the time of his death, but found, correctly, that the remains were at the beginning of the twenties.

The remains were examined by Michael Charney, Ph.D. and, presumably, macerated (this is not properly documented by Dr. Charney). This reviewer found several areas of errors and confusion in this report.

(1) Dr. Charney's age estimate is too narrow, a point of some criticism by him in other cases. Most others would estimate the age a bit younger, but Dr. Charney's estimate is quite reasonable, if too narrow and, perhaps, high. Dr. Charney notes that the centrum of the vertebral bones are completely fused, but that is not the case. I also believe that the McKern and Stewart scores are somewhat lower than those recorded by Dr. Charney, but that is, indeed, subjective.

(2) The length of the left femur as measured by Dr. Charney is incorrect and impossible to duplicate, even by departing from the maximum length protocol. Dr. Charney reported that he measured the bone at 44.3 cm. Dr. Walter Birkby and I, working together, were unable to reproduce such a short measurement with the proximal and distal ends of the bone in contact even when departing from all the normal measuring techniques. By that time, a cortical sample had been cut from

The left femur was not DNA analyzed. Dr. Charney's measurement was not even close to the maximum length of the fragmented left femur of CILHI 0055-88. The shortest possible measurement that Dr. Birkby and I recorded for the left femur, lacking the bone sample that was cut for DNA submission, was 44.8 cm. That was achieved by placing the cut surface of the distal fragment against the inferior end of the shaft of the proximal portion. Thus, even with a fragment of bone cut away, we were still unable to achieve the measurement of Dr. Charney. On 26 November 1988 when I examined these remains in Largo, Florida, I was able to examine the sample of the left femur that had been removed for DNA analysis, but not used. I found that this sample articulated along its broken superior margin with the inferior margin of the proximal portion. There was solid indication that the korf of the saw blade was only about 1 mm, thus, a good measurement of the total femoral length was possible. I repeatedly obtained a measurement of 45.3 cm for the maximum length of this left femur. When the osteometric board was positioned on 44.3 cm (Dr. Charney's reported measurement), the three pieces of the femur (proximal and distal fragments as well as the cut sample) had to be arranged with anterior/posterior bowing beyond the normal range for any human race.

(3) Dr. Charney reported that he used the formula $2.3 \times \text{femur} + 61.41 \pm 3.27 = \text{height in cm}$. The correct formula is $2.38 \times \text{femur} + 61.41 \pm 3.27 = \text{height in cm}$. By dropping the .08 x femur, Dr. Charney achieved an estimate 1.4 inches less than what the correct formula would have yielded. One simply does not change formulas. If this was done accidentally, it demonstrates a shocking lack of care. Taken together, Dr. Charney's impossible measurement and his incorrect formula result in a stature estimate several inches below what should be the result. Working independently, Dr. Hinkes, Dr. Birkby, and I all found the best estimate (using Steele's segment 1 formula for the right femur) to be within a quarter inch of the stature reported in the military health records of HPM DENNIS. Using the correct formula and when the maximum length of the femur and the lowest possible measured maximum length of the left femur (even after the removal of the DNA sample) the best estimate is within one half standard error of the last recorded height for HPM DENNIS.

(4) The remaining portions of the palate are adequate to determine that the remains were those of a Caucasoid with a reasonable degree of scientific certainty. It is surprising that someone with Dr. Charney's experience was unable to reach a conclusion.

(5) Dr. Charney, not for the first time, confuses anterior femoral curvature with bowlegs. In the former, the femur is slightly bowed anteriorly. In the latter, the leg is bowed laterally. It is incomprehensible to this reviewer why Dr. Charney is unable to understand this basic difference. I would refer him to the articles by Stewart, Malensky, and Gilbert for an elementary grasp of anterior femoral bowing.

These remains were not DNA analyzed. Dr. Charney's measurement was not even close to the maximum length of the fragmented left femur of CILHI 0055-88. The shortest possible measurement that Dr. Birkby and I recorded for the left femur, lacking the bone sample that was cut for DNA submission, was 44.8 cm. That was achieved by placing the cut surface of the distal fragment against the inferior end of the shaft of the proximal portion. Thus, even with a fragment of bone cut away, we were still unable to achieve the measurement of Dr. Charney. On 26 November 1988 when I examined these remains in Largo, Florida, I was able to examine the sample of the left femur that had been removed for DNA analysis, but not used. I found that this sample articulated along its broken superior margin with the inferior margin of the proximal portion. There was solid indication that the korf of the saw blade was only about 1 mm, thus, a good measurement of the total femoral length was possible. I repeatedly obtained a measurement of 45.3 cm for the maximum length of this left femur. When the osteometric board was positioned on 44.3 cm (Dr. Charney's reported measurement), the three pieces of the femur (proximal and distal fragments as well as the cut sample) had to be arranged with anterior/posterior bowing beyond the normal range for any human race.

Dr. Smith, dentist at CILHI, made a reasonable interpretation of the dental records. His report, along with that of Dr. Hinkins, leads one to conclude that these are the remains of HM3 DENNIS. When the enhancements by Dr. Campbell and Dr. Ebert of dental radiographs are considered, there can be no reasonable doubt.

I find that these remains were from a white male who died in his early twenties, most likely around 20 to 24 years. He was most likely over 57 inches in stature. I confirmed that tooth numbers 1 and 16 were not fully erupted at death, that number 15 had two occlusal amalgam restorations, and that number 14 had been extracted during life. All of this information was consistent with the proper interpretation of the military health records of HM3 DENNIS which have been examined by me. His reported blood type, common in American Whites, but not very common in Southeast Asian Mongoloids, was the same as that found in the remains in 1971. The morphology in two teeth seen in an antemortem and postmortem radiographs was extremely similar.

The events of the incident, helicopter fire and accompanying explosions, are consistent with the condition of the skeletal remains.

If these remains were part of a turnover from another country with no provenience or other information, this identification might not be strong enough to make an absolute identification. To imagine, however, that another body with those remarkable similarities could have come from the same crash is beyond any reasonable probability.

CILHI 0055-88 ANALYSIS

At the request of Mr. John Rogers of the Department of the Navy and Mr. Jerry Dennis, brother of HM3 Mark V DENNIS, I brought the upper five thoracic vertebrae and cranial remains from the above referenced case to this laboratory for further analysis. Fragments of two teeth (#15 and 16) that had been used for DNA analysis were also present. I also brought an antemortem 1964 periapical film of HM3 DENNIS and a PA chest radiograph identified as that of HM3 DENNIS which was made at the time of his induction into service.

The two teeth were reconstructed and radiographed. The first three thoracic vertebrae, the only distinctive thoracic vertebrae seen in the chest film, were also radiographed. The resulting dental and vertebral radiographs were compared with those of HM3 DENNIS. The comparisons were done with magnification and macro video equipment.

As previously noted in previous reports (Lowell J. Levine, D.D.S. on 15 November 1988 and H. R. Campbell, D.D.S. and James Ian Ebert, Ph.D. on 30 June 1988), the antemortem and postmortem comparisons of #15 and 16 showed consistent dental morphology.

The antemortem chest film which has not been used in any previous comparisons in this case showed many consistent morphological areas when compared with the postmortem vertebral radiographs. The three spinous processes, the shapes of the laminae of the three vertebrae, and the spaces between the laminae of the three vertebrae were very consistent.

This additional radiographic comparison demonstrates once again that CILHI 0055-88 and the known biological information on HM3 DENNIS are consistent in each and every comparison that can be made.

Based on the above, the inescapable conclusion must be made that the remains designated as CILHI 0055-88 are indeed those of DENNIS, Mark V, 222-42-1904, HM3, USN.

Dear Mr. Rogers,

On Saturday, April 22, I received your Memo attached to the 16 April 1989 CILHI 0055-88 ANALYSIS completed by Dr. Maples. I called your office collect today as you requested. I was informed you would not be available until Thursday.

By the time you return, I may have had throat surgery which will cause paralysis of my vocal cords. The paralysis may last for as little as a few days or as long as six months. As I may not be able to talk to you, I am making my request in writing.

Dr. Maples's report addresses:

- a. reconstructed teeth
- b. radiographs of the teeth
- c. magnification
- d. macro video

Please forward the above and the entire remains to Dr. Charney at CSU. I will get ahold of you and Mike when I am able.

Thank you for your continued interest.

Dear Mr. Dennis:

This is in response to your recent letter to Mr. John Rogers, a member of my staff, concerning Doctor William Maples' additional analysis on the remains of CILHI 0055-88.

After a complete review of the case, this Command is offering the following alternatives:

1. Doctor Maples is still willing to present and explain his superimposition evaluation findings to you and Doctor Michael Charney at your earliest convenience. Doctor Charney may ask any questions he desires, or make no comments at all.

2. If Doctor Charney is unavailable to attend, I have enclosed a current list of Diplomates of the American Board of Forensic Anthropologists, so that you may select another expert to represent you for a second opinion.

If neither choice listed above is acceptable to you, then I request you submit any rebuttal documents or evidence in your possession, to the Armed Services Graves Registration Office, 2461 Eisenhower Avenue, Alexandria, Virginia 22331, no later than 31 July 1989. The Armed Forces Identification Review Board will review the entire investigation/identification of the remains of CILHI-0055-88 in early August.

My point of contact in this matter is Mr. John Rogers. You may call him collect at (202) 653-1345.

Dear Mr. Rogers,

This letter is in response to my letter to you of April 24, 1989, Admiral Koenig's certified letter to me dated 19 May, 1989 and my telephone conversation with you on July 14, 1989.

Before making my comments, I will quote some of the statements made by Dr. Michael Charney in his many communications with me:

"This work of enhancement and superimposition is a task for experts from fields other than that of the forensic anthropologist. I use such scientific experts here on campus in all my work. In a case such as this I want several such experts with me; colleagues of mine on campus in the departments of mechanical engineering, radiology (the health service), instructional media (photography). Rogers knows of the great job that last crew did with the McKinney case."

"You list a date of 31 July on the deadline. That gives us very little leeway - certainly not the time it will take to do all the above."

The remains in question were picked up for transportation to CILHI the end of March, 1968. Their initial report was delivered to me on the 26th of November, 1968. A period of eight months. During the November meeting with you, I became aware that a chest X-ray I have been requesting for years was in Mark's file. Until that time, the Navy had denied that such an X-ray existed. Rather than allow me to have a copy of the X-ray, Dr. William Maples determined he was going to do the analysis I wanted to have done. It was not done at my request as stated by Maples in his report. I still have not been given access to the X-ray or a copy of same. Dr. Maples' report was received by me on April 22, 1989; an additional five months after the initial CILHI report.

The total time used by CILHI and Dr. Maples was eighteen (18) months. You have given me only a few weeks to reply to their reports. I not only must give Dr. Charney ample time to complete his study of the 'new' information developed by Dr. Maples, I must complete the documentation of my response to the AFIB after Dr. Charney is completed with his report. He cannot complete the report without the information I requested from you in my April 24, 1989 letter. He will not be able to address Dr. Maples' latest report until that request is honored by you.

Much earlier in this investigation, I requested documentation from you on past correspondence and on Mr. Invest. You stated you were referring me to Cdr. Bill Reed, MEDCOM, as they must furnish the information I requested. My request to Cdr. Reed was dated February 27, 1989. I have received no reply since then. Since the information furnished to OLC-III for comparative analysis from the earlier reports, communications and the AIA report, the information is a necessary part of my reply. Since this is one of your comments, I do not understand why I should receive a response on an early August review of the case before all the information is available.

Jerry L. Dennis

The "Procedures for Consideration of Identification of Remains by the Armed Forces Identification Review Board" which you furnished to me state "The AIA will be notified of their opportunity to: (b) Have, in the case of recommended individual identification of remains, an independent professional examination of the remains..." I submit that you have not complied with that section since the 'new' information was developed by Dr. Rogers. I also submit that paragraph (2) has not been met as Dr. Rogers has not provided the such information as required.

Due to the above and other matters we have discussed, I request you extend the period in which I may submit matters to ninety (90) days after the remains and information on Dr. Maples' report reach the office of Dr. Charney. Further, I request the information I requested in my letter to you of April 24, 1989 concerning Dr. Maples' report now be furnished under the Freedom of Information Act.

Thank you for your involvement in these matters.

Dear Mr. Dennis:

This is in response to your recent letter to Mr. John Rogers, a member of my staff.

In my letter to you of 19 May 89, I stated that Doctor Maples is still willing to present and explain his superimposition evaluation findings to you and Doctor Charney.

After Mr. Rogers received your latest letter, he called Doctor Richard C. Froese, Chief Medical Examiner at the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology (AFIP), Washington, D.C. who volunteered his conference room at AFIP to host a meeting between you, Doctor Charney, Doctor Maples, Mr. Rogers, and any forensic expert (pathologist or odontologist) on the AFIP staff, that you or Doctor Charney may wish to consult.

If you agree to the meeting, this Bureau will pay your and Doctor Charney's transportation and per diem expenses, in accordance with current Joint Travel Regulations.

The earliest date Mr. Rogers and Doctor Maples will be available for the meeting will be on 11 Oct 89.

After the meeting, Doctor Charney will welcome to take a copy of Doctor Maples' video, the chest x-ray, vertebrae and reconstructed teeth back to his University in Colorado. At that time, we will determine how much of an extension is needed by you to submit your documentation to the Armed Forces Identification Review Board.

Mr. Rogers passed your concerns regarding your letter to Commander Reed, to his successor, Commander Larry W. Caplinger, who can be reached toll free at, 1 (800) 368-3283.

Your questions requested under the Freedom of Information Act, will be addressed separately by our legal division.

Mr. Rogers departs on leave Friday, 11 August and will be back in the office on 28 August.

If you wish further information during Mr. Rogers' absence, please feel free to contact his supervisor, Lieutenant Commander Harry C. Coffey, toll free at, 1 (800) 842-1668.

I hope this meets with your approval and that a solution to this case can be resolved to everyone's satisfaction.

DEAR COM MOOREMURDER,

I HAVE BEEN REVIEWING YOUR LETTER OF 28 AUGUST AND MY NOTES ON OUR TELEPHONE CONVERSATIONS OF SEPTEMBER 11 AND OCTOBER 17 OF THIS YEAR. I EXPECTED A REPLY ON THE STATUS OF THE DR. WM. MAPLES REPORT BY NOW. INSTEAD, I RECEIVED A LETTER FROM DR. MICHAEL CHARNEY TELLING ME OF A TELEPHONE CONVERSATION WITH JOHN ROBERTS IN WHICH JOHN ALLEGEDLY STATED THAT THE ONLY HOLD ON MY BROTHER'S CASE IS THAT JOHN IS WAITING ON DR. CHARNEY'S REPORT ON SUPERIMPOSITION, NOT ON MAPLES' SUPPORT MATERIAL. FROM THAT CONVERSATION IT WOULD APPEAR THAT THE HOLD INTENDS TO DO NOTHING WITH MAPLES. PLEASE CONTACT ME IF ANY WORDS. PLEASE DO SO BY DECEMBER 15 AS I HAVE A NUMBER OF PERSONS TO DISCUSS THE MATTER WITH DURING THE CONFESSIOANAL CHRISTMAS BREAK IF YOU ARE TAKING NO ACTION.

IN ADDITION TO THE ABOVE CONVEPRATION BETWEEN DR. CHARNEY AND JOHN ROBERTS, I HAVE RECEIVED INFORMATION THAT AIRFORCE MORTUARY PEOPLE FROM TYNDALL BASE HAVE STATED THAT DR. MAPLES MAY BE SUCCEEDING DR. HERLEY AT GILMI. DO YOU HAVE THE IDEA OF A MAN DOING "PERSONAL RESEARCH" ON ALL OUR MIA'S BEING RETURNED? I DO NOT.

IF I HAVE NOT HEARD FROM YOU BY MID DECEMBER DR. IN THE INTERIM I HEAR DR. MAPLES IS IN A PROBABLE MOVE TO GILMI. MY AGREEMENT TO "LAY LOW" AND LET YOU HANDLE THINGS IS REINFORCED. I'M SURE YOU UNDERSTAND MY POSITION AND DETERMINATION.

I SINCERELY WISH YOU AND YOURS A HAPPY HOLIDAY SEASON. I REALIZE WE ARE ON DIFFERENT SIDES OF A VERY CONTROVERSIAL ISSUE. BUT I HOLD NO GRUDGES WHEN YOU MUST DO WHAT YOU ARE SAID TO DO WHEN ADVISED BY HIGHER AUTHORITY.

Dear Mr. Dennis:

This is to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 25, 1989 which was received in this office on December 15, 1989.

I apologize for not getting back to you sooner. Mr. Rogers was on the road quite a bit in October and I was out of the office for most of November. I am afraid that the matter of Doctor Maples' video tape fell through the cracks. After being reminded by your most recent letter, I have reviewed the matter and discussed it with Mr. Rogers. As I stated in one of our earlier conversations, under the Freedom of Information Act the government is obligated to release materials which are in its possession. It is my understanding that all such documents have been released. Doctor Maples' video tape is not in our possession and it is not entirely clear to whom the tape belongs. According to Mr. Rogers, Doctor Maples is under contract with the Army and the Army would be the appropriate agency to determine whether Doctor Maples has violated his contract by either making the video tape or by refusing to turn it over. If it is determined that his retention of the video tape is a violation of his contract, the Army's contract representatives would be the appropriate people to demand its release.

The office within the Headquarters of the Department of the Army that has authority over the contract with Doctor Maples may be reached by writing:

Lieutenant Colonel James Cole, USA
HQDA (TAPC-PED)
Alexandria, VA 22311-0482

According to Mr. Rogers, this is also the office which has oversight authority with regard to the Casualty Identification Laboratory - Hawaii (CILHI).

I have taken the liberty of forwarding a copy of your letter to Lieutenant Colonel Cole so that he may be aware that you have significant concerns regarding Doctor Maples. Because I have only recent and limited involvement in this case and am not fully versed in its history, I have not attempted to more fully explain your position to him for fear of inadvertently misrepresenting it.

Again, I apologize for the delay in responding to you. I can assure that it was unintentional.

Dear Mr. Dennis:

This is in response to your letter of November 25, 1989, to Commander Vogelhuber, U.S. Navy, and his subsequent referral to this office for further comment in reference to your concerns regarding Dr. Maples.

In order to address your concerns it is necessary to go back to the meeting between you, Dr. Maples, Dr. Charney and Mr. Rogers there at Largo. At that meeting you asked Dr. Maples if anything more could be done to determine if the remains in question were those of your brother. Dr. Maples then looked at the 70mm radiographic chest film made of Mark at the time of his induction into the U.S. Navy. Dr. Maples then informed you that it might be possible to compare that film and new postmortem radiographs. At your request and with no objection from Mr. Rodgers it was agreed to proceed. Dr. Maples did not request, nor receive, payment for the superimposition analysis from the Navy or Army. It was not done under any military personal service contract, but rather as a public service as is often done under the auspices of the C.A. Pound Human Identification Laboratory, University of Florida.

In order to see the complete results of the comparison, it would be necessary to see the films compared with the equipment at the C.A. Pound Lab. The videotape that seems to be the center of misunderstanding is simply a demonstration model of what Dr. Maples did. This videotape is not the analysis. It is the same as a poster describing evidence used in court. It is simply a brief demonstration of what Dr. Maples did in the lab and requires verbal narration and explanation. His conclusion in this case were not based on that videotape but what he saw during the more elaborate comparison in the lab. The production of a videotape is not even mentioned in Dr. Maples' report. It was his examination, not a videotape of limited aspects of that examination, that provided the basis of his conclusion. Dr. Maples' offer to demonstrate all the comparisons at his lab still stands. The rather large amount of equipment needed for this presentation precludes moving it to any other location.

Concerning the other points you raised, the information you received from Tyndale Air Force Base mortuary folks is not true. There has been no serious discussion about Dr. Maples replacing Dr. Kerley at CILMI. Such information properly falls in the unfounded rumor category. I do not understand your comment about Dr. Maples doing "personal research" on MIA remains. The consultant contracts state that "employment by the U.S. Government may restrict or limit private employment or business activities if they involve matters in which the United States is a party or has direct and substantial interest."

I trust this will clarify your concerns.

Dear John,

Here are two sets of the Mark V. Dennis case [CILHI 0055-88] x-ray enhancement photographs. I decided to send you 8" x 12" enlargements, rather than 4" x 6" prints as appeared in our report, and I'm glad I had these made because I think they show the detail a lot better than the small prints. Dr. Campbell and I did the major part of our analyses using a slide projector, which is even better, but I think these enlargements should help you study the enhancements and show them to others.

I do think we would like to do some more work with the radiographs, if Bill Maples can get some on the reconstructed teeth. The slightly different angles between the ante- and the original postmortem radiographs is quite unfortunate.

We're also looking forward to helping with the additional (was it 182) repatriated remains, just as soon as things get sorted out at CIL and there are radiographs to work with. Please get in touch and/or have Ellis get in touch just as soon as anyone knows about additional cases, so that we can organize our work to properly coincide with that at CIL.

Hope all is well with you and that you have a good Christmas and of course the best possible New Year.

INTERVIEW OF CAPT G. A. LUCAS

1. CAPT Gary Allen LUCAS (Vice LUCAS), _____, HHSR Supply, Marine Corps Air Station, Yuma, AZ was interviewed on 7 October 1981 in an effort to obtain additional details of Subj's reported demise in a helicopter crash in Vietnam on 15 July 1966. He said the incident occurred during an operation identified as "LASTING" when additional troops were being taken into an area just north of Quang Tri Province to reinforce troops there. The plane had been overrun. He stated that he was part of a Huey (4) crew on the helicopter, which was shot down by hostile ground forces, and he identified the other three members of the crew as: Thomas C. MCALISTER (pilot); George C. RICHY (Co-pilot); and the crewchief (NFI). In addition, there were twelve (12) combat-ready troops on the helicopter, whose names were unknown to the crew, or a total of sixteen persons. The pilot, co-pilot, and himself were the only survivors to the best of his knowledge, and a total of thirteen (13) persons perished as opposed to eleven (11) as previously reported. CAPT LUCAS said that he saw two (2) individuals jump from the aircraft, on fire prior to the crash and assumed they were killed. He did not know Subj and indicate he had no way of knowing if he was one of the twelve troops they were carrying when the helicopter was shot down. He further advised that an article covering the incident had later appeared in the 1 August 1966 edition of Newweek Magazine with pictures captioned by the name "Horst FAAS" - Associated Press. He provided a copy of the article (ATCH (1)) and was of the opinion that possibly FAAS or Newweek Magazine could provide additional photographs or data that might be of assistance. CAPT LUCAS said he had been knocked unconscious for a period of time when the helicopter crashed. His statement is ATCH (2).

I, CAPT Gary Alan LUCAS, USMC, _____, hereby make the following voluntary statement to _____ who has identified himself to me as a Special Agent of the U. S. Naval Investigative Service: _____

I was born on _____ in _____ I enlisted in the USMC in May 1959 and I was born on _____ in _____ Airland.

I am presently attached to HENS Supply, HCSB Yuma, Arizona.

I was asked me to provide details and what information I can regarding a an incident that occurred in Vietnam in an area just north of Quang Tri Province and south of the DMZ on 15 July 1966 when the USMC CH-46 helicopter I was in was shot down by a hostile forces ground fire. I understand that one of the persons who perished as a result of the incident was IM3 Mark V. DEWHAUS, 207-42-1001; however, I did not specifically know that person by name.

On the day in question, I was assigned to the CH-46 helicopter in question as a door gunner with HMV-265 attached to MAG-16 operating out of Marble Mountain in Hanning. We were involved in operations Hastings and we were moving combat troops to engage North Vietnamese regulars which was the first encounter with these troops in the Vietnam War. At around 1800 that day, we were advised that there was a company being overrun and that we were going to take in additional troops to reinforce the troops that were there. The CH-46 was loaded with twelve (12) combat ready troops in addition myself, the crewchief, the pilot and copilot. There were sixteen individuals on the helicopter. After we departed, we were in the air for about thirty (30) minutes on our way to the landing zone, when the pilot informed the crewchief and myself that the zone was coming up and it was "hot". About this time we were hit in the starboard fuel cell with an incendiary round and immediately caught fire. The flames were about waist high moving forward and aft in the cabin and the smoke was so thick no one could see. The pilot was notified that we had been hit and he immediately started to descend to the landing zone. When we went about 1300 - 1800 feet, I overheard conversation between the pilot and copilot indicating that they were unable to see. I unlocked my safety harness and glanced toward the rear of the aircraft. I saw an individual run off the aft ramp of the helicopter and his clothing was smoking. I assume he ran out of the aircraft because of the intense heat and was killed upon impact with the ground as we were still around 1200 feet in the air. As the helicopter progressed toward the landing zone and was at an elevation of about three-hundred feet (300'), we were still on fire and went into a hard right bank and I saw a second man jump from the aircraft. I was on fire at the time. Shortly after that, we hit the ground and I always felt the aircraft probably fell on that man. As far as I know, his body was never found. We hit the ground with the helicopter on its starboard side. I was knocked unconscious on impact. When I came to, I noticed that the pilot and copilot had exited the aircraft. I found out later that some of our forces on a nearby hill framed from the aircraft. I then elected to see if there were any other survivors in the aircraft. I found that the crewchief was still alive but his leg from the knee down was pinned between the aircraft and ground and he had also been hit by a round. When I was attempting to pull him free, he was hit by other rounds in the back and died. Some ammunition from our own aircraft was exploding. Everyone else on the helicopter was still strewn in their seats and their bodies were burned beyond recognition. They were sitting right over the fuel tank and the rear third of the aircraft was like an incinerator. I left the aircraft and the landing zone and moved into the bush toward our troops. Around thirty minutes later, I came to an outpost and they took me to the top of the hill and administered emergency first aid. Around noon the next day, I was nadivernal out.

... as was the description I have of the incident which took place later in the hospital. I met an individual whose name I do not know that told me he had been with the troops on the hill nearby and saw one of the men jump from the helicopter. In this type operation, we were just moving troops and we were only concerned about the number of men on the aircraft. We had no knowledge of who they were individually. I have no way of knowing if Hqs Mark DENNIS was in our helicopter when this incident occurred or not. I can specifically say that there was a four (4) man crew and twelve (12) passengers on the helicopter at the time. I found out later that there was a Newsweek magazine correspondent at the scene identified as Horat 1748 and an article covering the incident with our helicopter later appeared in the 1 August 1966 edition of the magazine. In the article, pictures taken at the scene have the name Horat 1748-Associated Press inscribed underneath the pictures. Possibly GAO or Newsweek magazine could provide additional data or photographs that might be of assistance. If Hqs Mark DENNIS was in fact on the aircraft, and if he was one of the two individuals that jumped out, it is highly unlikely that he would have survived. This is what I recall of the incident to the best of my recollection. I have read the completed statement and corrected all errors.

AMERICANS AT WAR

It is hard going, hot, too. First Sgt. Warren Eichelberger's Company is 327th Battalion, First Brigade, 1st Airborne Division, moves down the slope, through the dark, green jungle of 150-foot thickets and 15-foot-high grass bounding over them, through the slippery and gunlike that is Vietnam's own peculiar version of mud. "Keep it spread out if we come in a clearing," says Eichelberger. Many of Eichelberger's men are youngsters, green replacement, and the new men always tend to cluster together. "That's dangerous," says Eichelberger. "If Charlie pops up, he'll get a helluva bunch of 'em with one grenade or one bomb, and it'll be a big loss."

Now the rain is up, and Eric John says, "I can't see the end of the Vietnam," tells such, cycling the gun and the end of white rope wrapped around his shoulders like a scarf. He slips, pitches forward, twisting his knee (his thin leg grimes with pain, but he rises and lunges about with the rest of his fellow paratroopers. He enters the mud and his weakened body is mostly he against the bright white soil of the field, against the single background. "This is more to 're' him," he says, "and when he says, 'I don't see more.' He starts to say, 'Schellenger's voice, heavy with the sorrow God gave all seignior, comes back at him.' 'Yes, absolutely, if the Army wanted you to withdraw on patrol, they'd send you a song home.' 'An' now's feature start to go last, then he says, 'Ah-hi, take it easy, Sarge,' he says but he says it under his breath.

away from FitzGerald's front porch, Capt. Robert Lee Gator is a 6-foot, 100-pounder in his bunker with the machine gun. "Go in there all the way to the end of it," he says, "or the rest will get it." Almost midnight, Gator has ordered the windmills that pump water to the levee. The soft light of a full moon glimmers seductively off the skin of soldiers in the machine gun. Gator is 25 and a member of K. K. K., says, Third Battalion, Third Marine Regiment. He is a Negro. "At night," he says, looking at the sanding parapet, "you must fight like a thousand miles away, like your eyes and ears are right here."

of the war since it began in earnest three and a half years ago. This is not a stubbornly hard-headed army (though once individuals in it are), it is tough, it is trained to fight and it fights—succeeding well but it does its fighting with the quiet, laconic, rare-to-doggedness of professionals. No one, in particular "Ging Ma" and none of Sergeant Kowthorpe's paratroopers would ever even think of selling "Geronimo."

he can, and does something else. It often annoys other soldiers when he does this. He takes the time to collect cigarettes out of his Crationals and (because he disapproves of them) tears each one into unworkable (and unattractive) shreds.

1st Sargent Eickelberger, Major, also served during the Korean War (though his duties kept him Stateside) and he feels there is a poignant difference between that war and this one. "In Vietnam, 'This is a hard war,' they said, 'emotionally hard.' We fought into the villages and try and get the enemy out of the villages. We fought in Korea. Here we have to protect what all the time 'The defense perimeter' is all around you."

One of the most astute and incisive top commanders in Vietnam points out some ideas somewhat differently. He is Maj. Gen. William E. DeFay, one of U.S. Army's fastest rising stars (this is the first post to circumnavigate General of the U.S. First Infantry Division—the United States' largest combat division—on foot). As a leader and an officer whose grasp of the battlefield and strategy promise big things to come.

"This war," says DePuy, "is still a cat-and-mouse game. In conventional warfare, you try to capture terrain. Here our objective is to kill the enemy, is inflicting the maximum of losses. That's what it's less important. Twenty-four hours a day, it's a major battle, not troops are in the line." DePuy seems to have ient by Alfred Thayer Mahan. "For the military historian," he goes on, "this war is more like naval warfare. The jungle is an immense ocean. Under the cover of the jungle, enemy battalions maneuver like submarines. Sometimes they submerge for a quick attack. Sometimes they stay hidden in the depth of the tropical rain forest."

"Never before in the history of war," says DePuy with quiet intensity, "have troops commanded as much in silence. The basic military unit in Vietnam is the battery, highly mobile and troop-led by air. [That] is the great novelty of this war is the helicopter. It takes the Viet Cong ten days to move three of its battalions. We can move the battalions in one day. The result is that ten American battalions can fight 50 Viet Cong battalions. Now the general runs over the battle and still he is constant contact with his units by radio."

landscape for hours, the fire raged. Then, Navy Phantom and Crusaders moved in low smothering the enemy positions with bombs and napalm, and the marines slipped out of the trap.

But they paid a price, too. Marine company was badly battered, and four prominent troop-carrying helicopters were damaged or destroyed. Three soldiers died on the tough landing zone. Two were shot down, one by a Communist incendiary bullet that sent the chopper flaming into the hills, causing twelve injuries to three deaths, and crushing almost 500 of one of the Marine units. It is the ground to produce one of the worst and most spectacular sequences of the war (see above). But of the Americans paid a price, the Communist paid a higher one: they lost more than 2000 dead, and the Marines, with fresh reinforcements, moved on in their search for the enemy as he picked off one of the Marine company's command.

All the mobility and power DeFuy brought to lightly were on display last week in Operation Hastings, a daring helicopter assault by seven Marine battalions against a regular North Vietnamese division that recently infiltrated into the rugged hills of Quang Tri Province, less than 2 miles from the North Vietnamese border. This detachment of Marines was quickly pinned down by withering enemy fire. "A beautiful two-leaf nest" said a young Marine, speaking the last automatic rifle into the hostile express a desire to discuss the issue with the U.S.

Tenness continued to insist when, at midnight, the President scheduled a full press conference and left little doubt in anyone's mind that he intended to issue a stern warning in response to Hanoi's threats.

But before Mr. Johnson could go on the air, North Vietnamese President Ho Chi Minh weighed in with what appeared to be a promise that, trials or no trials, the pilots would not be executed. Replying to a private appeal from the National Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy and from U.S. Socialist leader Norman Thomas, who declared: "No doubt you know that the policy of the Government [of North Vietnam] with regard to the enemies captured in war is to humanize them."

"Humanize" image: Significantly, however, Ho did not rule out the possibility that the airmen would still be brought to trial. And in fact, one high Administration official predicted that Hanoi would probably proceed with some kind of courtroom show, perhaps even sentence the prisoners to death and then commute the sentences in a move to bolster its "humane" image abroad. Nonetheless, at his press conference, the President made it perfectly clear that the U.S. would view even purely propaganda trials of U.S. fighting men as "deplorable and repulsive." Faced to spell out possible U.S. reprisals, Mr. Johnson remained purposely vague, partly, no doubt, because of Uncle Ho's father.

Afterward, Mr. Johnson was accused to leave himself as much room as possible for public maneuver. And to that end the U.S. announced at the week's end that it was:

"linking nineteen North Vietnamese sailors or prisoners who might become part of an effort at a prisoner exchange, a calling for a meeting of the International Red Cross Committee to discuss the application of the Geneva Convention governing the treatment of prisoners of war."

Reinforcing the ties of U.S. servicemen held prisoner in "detained," "captured or intercepted," and "missing," it strengthened its argument that these men are fully entitled to the neutral protection of POWs.

One question complicating the issue was that when it comes to North Vietnam, the U.S. is dealing with a near vacuum of verifiable information. Officially, there are 45 U.S. airmen listed as prisoners in North Vietnam but that figure is a matter of speculation since Hanoi has adamantly refused to divulge a roster of prisoners. And though it is rumored that the airmen live in "plastic comfort" in a prison in Hanoi, some observers report that the Americans have been forced to march through villages with ropes tied around their wrists, and placards of the captives brought out by neutral nation photographers hardly suggest that their treatment in the North is up to anything like Geneva Convention standards.

1. On 10 Oct 81, Thomas Christopher MCALLISTER, Civilian, was interviewed at his residence.
MCALLISTER furnished a sworn statement, Attachment (1), wherein he advised that he was the pilot of the CH46 helicopter that was shot down by hostile forces 15 July 66 near Quang Tri, Republic of Vietnam. MCALLISTER advised that he did not know the individual identities of his passengers at any time, and that after the crash incident, accounting for the casualties was done by persons other than himself. He said he did not know Subj. He also provided three photographs taken by news service photographer Horat PASS (PIKNETIC) showing various stages of the descent and subsequent fire. MCALLISTER did not see how it was possible that Subj could have survived the crash. He said they landed within the perimeter defense, and he saw no enemy forces anytime during the incident. In addition to PASS' photographs, MCALLISTER said, he was told that a Japanese camera man had filmed the entire descent, and that it was later shown on Japanese television news.

1. Thomas Christopher McALLISTER make the following free and voluntary statement to whom I know to be a Special Agent of the United States Naval Investigative Service. I make this statement of my own free will and without any threats made to me or promises extended. I fully understand that this statement is given concerning my knowledge of the events surrounding the death of Mark V. DOMINICK, MCJ USN, on 15 Jul 66 in Quang Tri, RVN.

I was the pilot on a UH1H CH-46 helicopter that was shot down by hostile forces on 15 Jul 66 near Quang Tri, RVN. There were four members of the crew; myself, co-pilot RICHES, crew chief TELFER (who was killed that day) and side gunner LUCAS.

A group of marines had called for reinforcement. They were surrounded by a division of North Vietnamese leaders. The marines were in a valley and the enemy were on the ridges surrounding it. They were probably 4 to 5 miles away. There were at least four aircraft in my flight. I was the second one in. We picked up a group of marines at Dong Na. I think there were 12 altogether. I cannot be sure of this number. I was only concerned with the weight and the fuel load. I never knew who the passengers were individually. It was necessary to leave the rear ramp partially descended in flight, because it took too long to lower on the ground, increasing our vulnerability.

As we started our descent to the landing zone (LZ) Y was approximately 1000 to 1500 feet of altitude when we were hit, probably by .50 cal machine-gun fire. This was almost simultaneous with the squadron commander's order to leave the area. In just a few seconds, our stubbing fuel tank was hit and ruptured, probably by tracer bullets. Burning fuel was immediately sucked into the passenger compartment, probably through the partially-open rear ramp. The fire and smoke came all the way forward to the cockpit, injuring my eyes and temporarily depriving me of my sight. I still had control of the aircraft, and immediately decided to land and try to evacuate. The descent took about 30 to 60 seconds. The gunner LUCAS stood in the opening of the cockpit and bled out of the flames with his back to the rear. The two in the compartment were trapped and could not escape.

We landed hard on a gentle hillside and the aircraft capsized on its right side, in so doing, it killed TOLPA, who had jumped out. I was momentarily pinned in the cockpit but managed to free myself and exit. RICHIE exited by the co-pilot's emergency hatch, followed by me. LUCAS went back into the compartment to see if anyone there could be helped. He told me later he saw no one alive, so he got out. We walked a short distance up the hill and within 1 to 3 minutes the aircraft exploded and burned for several hours. I saw no one else exit the aircraft. In all likelihood, they were already dead when the craft hit the ground.

We landed within the marines' perimeter. I did not see any enemy forces during.

the entire ordeal. We were immediately taken to the aid station. A-222
The balance of the flight returned to Dong Ha and there the accounting of the casualties took place. I never had a direct part of this accounting.

While I cannot state that it was impossible for DENNIS to survive,
I can say that the possibility is extremely remote. He had no chance to escape after the crash because LUCAS would have seen him. If he had fallen or jumped from the craft before the crash, either he would have been killed in the fall or the fall would have been photographed. Horst FARR of UPT took still photos of the entire descent. I have lent my copies of these photos to today.
The negatives probably still exist. Also, I was also told at the time that a Japanese newsmen had taken movie film of the descent and crash.
I was told it was shown on Japanese television.

All I can say is that if Mark DENNIS was in that aircraft, I do not see how he could have survived. I have no explanation for the discrepancies in the autopsies. LUCAS was the one who had direct contact with the passengers during the flight and the crash incident.
I understood that RICHEY was killed several years ago in an accident.

I can provide no further information pertinent to this investigation.

I have read, understood, and initialled all corrections in the above statement, and it is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

SYNOPSIS

1. Investigation initiated regarding SUBJECT who is officially listed as having been killed in action (KIA) on 15 Jul 1968 in the Republic of Vietnam (RVN) when a U.S. Marine Corps helicopter crashed. In light of numerous factors, see infra, SUBJECT's family had made extensive efforts to have SUBJECT's status changed to missing in action (MIA) vice KIA. 1971 exhumation of SUBJECT's remains surfaced additional information which prompted SUBJECT's next of kin (NOK) to question the positive means of identification utilized at the time of SUBJECT's death; however, a second exhumation conclusively identified the remains as SUBJECT. An individual reportedly at the RVN crash site has corresponded with SUBJECT's NOK and allegedly reported information contrary to official U.S. Navy/U.S. Marine Corps accident reports re SUBJECT. The individual was interviewed by the NIS but did not provide any specific substantive information concerning any misidentification of SUBJECT/possibility of his survival. Investigation pending interviews of the three helicopter survivors (Pilot/Co-Pilot/Gunner) and other additional interviews as considered appropriate.

BACKGROUND

2. CDR Mable L. WALLIS, USN, Naval Military Personnel Command (NMPC), Retired Personnel Support Section (Code 641E) contacted the NIS regarding SUBJECT/Instant Investigation. CDR WALLIS provided Reporting Agent with a compendium of reports regarding SUBJECT whose family has made extensive efforts to have his status changed to MIA vice KIA. A review of the voluminous files regarding SUBJECT determined that SUBJECT was a passenger aboard a USMC CH-46A helicopter (Bureau #152500) assigned to HHN-265 the crew of the helicopter was CAPT MCALISTER (Pilot), 1ST LT George RICHEY (Co-Pilot) and SGT Gary A. LUCAS (Gunner). On 15 July 1966 at 1815H, approximately 12 miles from Dong Ha, Quang Tri Province, RVN (298° Radial), the USMC CH-46A helicopter was shot down by hostile forces ground fire. The helicopter exploded while attempting to land and subsequently burned. In the aftermath of the crash/fire, it was determined that nine (9) USMC personnel and two (2) USN (including SUBJECT)

Members perished. SUBJECT suffered extensive third degree burns caused by the explosion of the helicopter/fuel which was determined to be the cause of death of SUBJECT. Due to the combat conditions, location of the crash site and the collection of the remains, SUBJECT's NOK were not notified of SUBJECT's death until 22 Jul 1966.

3. SUBJECT's remains were transported from the crash site to the U.S. Army Mortuary, TAN SON NHUT Air Base, Saigon, RVN; the remains were embalmed on 29 Jul and transported to the United States on 30 Jul 1966. SUBJECT was buried 09 Aug 1966 in Miamisburg, OH. Due to the extent of the burns, a visual identification of SUBJECT by NOK was not effected and a closed coffin burial was strongly recommended by Department of Defense personnel; SUBJECT's NOK complied with DOD suggestion. Fingerprint identification of the remains was not possible due to the extent of the burns. It was learned that the identification of SUBJECT was made by a process of elimination when the number of cadavers found at the crash site were compared to the names of the missing from the helicopter manifest (passenger list); SUBJECT was the only one of the eleven (11) deceased personnel who was not positively identified in Vietnam through conclusive means (e.g. fingerprint/dental chart comparison), although the identification of SUBJECT as the deceased was never questioned by SUBJECT's NOK during 1966.

4. Gary L. DENNIS (SUBJECT's brother), 5175 Pine Mount Circle, Pine View Estate, Miamisburg, OH 45342, viewed a photograph of an American Prisoner of War in the 30 Nov 70 issue of "NEWSWEEK" magazine. The photograph was taken by an East German Journalist (HFI) and had also been printed in the 20 Oct 1967 issue of "LIFE" magazine although the "LIFE" magazine photograph was not noticed by SUBJECT's NOK. Upon SUBJECT's family viewing the photograph in Nov 1970, they "identified" the POW as SUBJECT and contacted the U.S. Navy regarding the possibility of SUBJECT still being alive in a POW camp. Subsequent inquiries/research by Naval Intelligence Command (NAVINTCOM) determined that the photograph appearing in the "LIFE"/"NEWSWEEK" magazines was of LT (now CDR) Paul E. GALANTI, USN. LT GALANTI was a Naval Aviator who had been shot down while on a sortie over Vietnam and has been verified as being a Prisoner of War. However, during the intervening period pending identification of the individual in the "LIFE"/"NEWSWEEK" photograph, SUBJECT's NOK then began to question the actual process of identifying SUBJECT's remains and made extensive congressional contacts.

5. Information subsequently surfaced wherein it was alleged by SUBJECT's NOK that the passenger manifest listing of personnel assigned aboard the helicopter SUBJECT was travelling in had varying reports as to the actual number of personnel aboard at the time of the crash. However, inquiries in 1966 determined the apparent discrepancies were attributed to the combat conditions of the operation wherein an entire USMC battalion air lift was being transported via twenty-five (25) USMC CH-46A helicopters. It was considered possible but not likely that an individual could have been flying aboard a helicopter and not listed as a passenger. It is noted that upon final review of the crash circumstances/operation, no information to support any discrepancies regarding the specific helicopter SUBJECT was travelling and the passengers aboard had ever been surfaced. In addition, doubt was raised by SUBJECT's NOK when it was learned that varying reports of the actual number of persons perishing in the crash initially varied between 11 and 13 before the final death toll of eleven was established.

6. Accordingly, pursuant to persistent demands of SUBJECT's NOK, SUBJECT's remains were exhumed in May 1971 (HFI). Dr. Roland PAPUCCI, Director of PAPUCCI Laboratories, Cincinnati, OH tentatively identified the remains as apparently that of an individual approximately 67" tall, the race of the remains could not positively be determined.

AGENT's NOTE: SUBJECT was a caucasian approximately 69" tall.

Further, some question was raised regarding the presence of particles (tetraethyl lead) in traces of gasoline that reportedly caused SUBJECT's death by extensive burning; the discovery of the particles were considered by NOK to be perhaps indicative of the remains having been killed in other than a helicopter crash (e.g. in ground combat).

7. In light of the findings which SUBJECT's NOK considered somewhat alarming, the Department of the Navy considered an examination of the remains by Armed Forces Institute of Pathology (AFIP)/Smithsonian Institute.

8. SUBJECT's remains were re-exhumed with examination conducted on 21 Jul 1971 at the Montgomery County, Ohio Coroner's Office, Dayton, OH. Upon examination of the remains, the prosecutor concluded that the deceased was 6'9" tall; based on examination of "the cranial vault" and "nasal bridge," the remains were conclusively identified as a caucasian.

9. Dental record comparison with those of the remains determined "the postmortem dental Characteristics of the remains are in favorable agreement with the ante-mortem dental photographs and SF603, Dental Health Record for HM3 Mark 'V' DENNIS." Concluding, the AFIP report confirmed the 1966 RVN identification of SUBJECT established by LCDR F. LUGO (MC), USNR and reports the conclusion reached after comprehensive study demonstrates that the remains examined 21 Jul 71 at the Montgomery County Morgue can only be those of HM3 Mark 'V' DENNIS, 7789145. Atch (1) is the 05 Aug 1971 Headquarters Air Force Logistics Command (HQAFLC) report of the reprocessing of SUBJECT's remains at the Montgomery County Morgue, Dayton, OH.

10. During the course of apparently extensive research by SUBJECT's brother, Michael WINNECK, Civilian, currently residing at reportedly advised he was at the 15 Jul 1966 QUANG TRI, RVN crash site. WINNECK reportedly provided information perhaps indicative of the possibility of SUBJECT having been captured by enemy forces vice perishing in the helicopter crash/ensuing blaze. Accordingly, HAWKILPERS, Washington, DC desired investigative assistance to interview WINNECK, as well as, any other interviews perhaps germane to the issue of SUBJECT's demise or capture at the time of the helicopter crash.

Headquarters Company, Third Battalion, Fourth Marines, Third Marine Division) was interviewed regarding the helicopter crash. WINNECK advised observing the helicopter being hit by hostile forces ground fire; before the helicopter exploded. WINNECK related he was able to see at least one person, badly burned, exiting the front end of the helicopter. WINNECK assisted in the removal of the remains of bodies from the aircraft but was unable to conclusively identify any of the victims due to the extent of the burns. WINNECK opined, although not witnessing same, that when the helicopter was hit and was descending, someone (perhaps the Corpsman who would normally be sitting in that door position) could have jumped from an approximately 30 to 40 foot altitude into the dry creek sandbed below and perhaps survived. Although injury was inevitable, survival was considered perhaps likely. WINNECK opined that if an individual had exited one of the helicopter doors he could possibly have wandered in a state of disorientation or confusion into the hands of hostile forces who were perhaps as close as approximately 25 feet away and at times in hand to hand combat with USMC personnel.

12. In summation, WINNECK was unable to provide any conclusive personal observations concerning the possibility of SUBJECT having survived the helicopter crash/fire or the possibility of capture by hostile forces or any other additional information considered germane to this investigation.

HEADQUARTERS, U.S. MARINE CORPS INQUIRIES

13. Inquiries concerning the Pilot, Co-Pilot, and Gunner of the downed helicopter determined that they were the only three survivors of the helicopter crash. The men were identified as (Pilot) CAPT Thomas C. MCALISTER, USMC, MSH: 005394, 1ST-LT (Co-Pilot) George C. RICHIEY, USMC, MSH: 008665 and (Gunner) USMC SGT Gary A. LUCUS. Review of USMC Headquarters determined CAPT MCALISTER is currently a civilian and reportedly residing at CAPT LUCUS is reportedly currently assigned to Headquarters and Maintenance Squadron (HMS) 42, Detachment "B", MAG-42 4th MAW, Naval Air Station, Millington, TN.

5. On 21 Jul 71 at the Montgomery County Morgue, the Air Force Identification Specialist, in the presence of Frank A. Eskridge, was given custody of a metal casket. The casket contained an unidentified Navy uniform and remains wrapped in an Old World blanket, white sheet and polyesterine.

6. There follows extracts from SF 88 (Mark "A" Dennis, 7709145) dated 2/4/64:

Age	Blood Group	Height	Hair Color	Weight	Build
17 yrs, 4 mos, 13 days	A, neg	67"	Brown	150	medium

NOTES: (1) At time of death deceased's age was 17 yrs, 4 mos, 24 days.
(2) At time of death deceased's height was about 69.0".

7. Identification Processing:

a. The remains removed from the casket disclosed the following:

Specimen 1 - Fractured skull with C-1 articulated to the occipital condyles. The greater portion of the frontal, Rt and Lt parietals and Lt temporal, a small portion of the Lt temporal are missing. The entire mandible, except the Lt mandibular condyle and neck which is charred, is missing. There is a traumatic fracture of C-7 and T-1.

Specimen 2 - The neck and torso, consisting of the spine from C-2 including the sacrum, articulated with the innominate, which in turn is articulated with the proximal 3/4 of Rt and Lt femurs. There is a heavy musculature development over the hips and upper thigh areas. The proximal 3/4 of the Lt humerus is articulated at the shoulder. All ribs are present and articulated. The distal extremities of rib bodies are missing. The chest cavity contains the heart and a portion of lung. A portion of liver is noted in the abdominal cavity. The anterior chest and abdominal cavities are open. The Lt humerus consisting of the head and 3/4 of the shaft is articulated to the torso.

Specimen 3 - Fractured distal 3/4 of Rt humerus and extremity.

Specimen 4 - Fractured proximal Rt radius measures 6 cm.

Specimen 5 - Fractured Rt knee joint consists of distal Rt femur (measures 12.6 cm); head and shaft of Rt tibia (measures 14.5 cm); the head and shaft of Rt fibula (measures 7.3 cm) and the patella.

Specimen 6 - Fractured Lt knee consists of the distal Lt femur (measures 8.5 cm); head and proximal shaft of Lt tibia (measures approximately 7.5 cm) and the proximal shaft and head Lt fibula (measures approximately 8.6 cm).

B. Identification Findings:

Specimen 1 - The skull is articulated to the maxilla, mandible with C-2 which is articulated to the maxilla, mandible, tooth #1, the lingual root of #2, #15 and #16. The maxilla, tooth #1, the lingual root of #2, #15 and #16 are impacted. There is evidence that teeth #3 and #4 are surgically extracted and the alveolar processes are healed over. There are two occlusal amalgam fillings on tooth #15. The alveolar process which supports teeth #4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13 has been buried away. A small portion of a root apex, either #6 or #7 is present in the buried alveolar process.

a. The dental record complete for HM-3 Dennis shows two occlusal restorations on tooth #14, accomplished on Oct 45, which is erroneous, since tooth #14 is recovered as having been extracted 18 Jan 64, 1 yr and 9 mos prior to the date the restorations were alleged to have been placed in tooth #14. The two occlusal restorations are in fact on #15. This error is commonly seen in dental identification because of the extraction of #14, tooth #15 has drifted mesially, and as a degree now occupies the alveolar area formerly retaining tooth #14.

(1) The post mortem dental anatomy of the remains is in favorable agreement with SF603, Dental Health Record and the dental radiographs prepared for HM-3 Mark "W" Dennis.

(2) See atch #9, Dental Findings, Col John D. Tarolano, DC, and Lt Col G. L. Koehler, DC, Dental Services Div, USAF Medical Center, WPAFB, 21 Jul 71.

(3) See atch #10, AF Form 477A, Dental Identification Record.

Specimen 2 - That specimen 1 (C-1 articulated to the skull) demonstrates good articulation with specimen 2 (C-2 articulated to the spine) proving that specimen 1 and 2 (the torso) are of one individual.

a. The Rt femur condyles associated with the Lt femur condyles disclose a height measurement of 69.0" (46.8 cm).

(1) This height measurement is comparable with that of Dennis at time of death applying the Mildred Trotter-Gallup C. Gleser Scale (Ref: Estimates of Stature From Maximum Lengths of the Sum of Measurements of Long Bone, 1958). The scale allows for an anticipated growth of 1.2 cm in American males from age 17 to 19.5 years. The recorded height on Dennis, 4 Feb 64, was 67 1/2" (45.6 cm). Since death occurred 15 Jul 66 or about 2 1/2 years after the 4 Feb 64 measurement, the height of 69.0" (46.8 cm) is established.

(2) From the Lt femur a specimen of good quality cancellous tissue was extracted. Two separate tests, using the Dr. P. D. Candella absorption techniques, were accomplished on the cancellous bone. Results of these tests disclosed post mortem blood group A. SF603 and SF601 prepared for HM-3 Dennis list his ante mortem ABO blood group type A. See atch 11.

b. Four separate tests, using the Dr. P. D. Candella absorption techniques, were accomplished on good quality cancellous and long tissue, and dried packed red blood cells contained in a small vein within the lung tissue (all from the torso) disclosed post mortem blood group A. SF603 and SF601 prepared for HM-3 Dennis list his ante mortem ABO blood group type A. See atch 11.

c. The dentition and Lt pubic symphyseal faces demonstrate an estimated age of 20-24 yrs. Although there is an osseous nodule on the inferior symphyseal faces which appears at about the 25th year the greater surface of the symphyseal faces denote an age ranging from 20 to 23 yrs. Therefore, the osseous growth must be judged post mortem because of other factors observed.

Specimen 3 - The fractured, unattached proximal Rt humerus morphologically compares very favorably with the articulated Lt humerus, specimen 1.

Specimen 4 - Fractured proximal Rt radius morphologically and development compares favorably with structure of the distal Rt humerus.

Specimen 5 - Rt knee joint, consisting of the distal Rt femur shaft, condyle, patella and head and proximal shaft of fibula morphologically in the opposite member of specimen 6, the Lt knee joint. Articulation of the distal and proximal shafts of Rt femur is not possible because of the charred fracture sites.

Specimen 6 - Lt knee joint is the opposite member of specimen 5 morphologically and the distal shaft can be demonstrated to articulate accurately with the proximal which is articulated to the torso.

9. Conclusions:

a. That the high and rather narrow cranial vault; the high nasal bridge; and narrow nasal aperture with knife-like sharpness of the lower borders are indicative of the Caucasian race. The deceased was Caucasian.

b. That the post mortem dental characteristics of the remains are in very favorable agreement with the ante mortem dental radiographs and SF603, Dental Health Record (beginning date 18 Jun 64) for HM-3 Mark "W" Dennis.

c. That the six Candella absorption tests established the ABO group as type A. Dennis's SF603 and SF601 recorded his ABO group as A.

d. That the established height of 69.0" predicted on the normal growth factor of the late "teen" is in agreement with the projected deceased's height at time of death.

e. That the skeletal and muscular development of the remains are of an individual of medium build, although the hip and thigh region reveals heavy muscle development. SF603 on HM-3 Dennis shows his build to be medium.

7. That specimens numbered 1 through 4 (as applied for the purpose of this report) are the remains of the deceased.

10. Summarizing:

The findings established in this report are directly compared with all statistical data collected on the 11 persons becoming deceased in the 15 Jul 66 helicopter disaster in the vicinity of Quang Tri Province, RVN. The conclusion reached after comprehensive study demonstrates that the remains examined 21 Jul 71 at the Montgomery County Morgue can only be those of 101-3 Mark "V" Dennis, 7789145.

This report confirms the identification obtained 21 Jul 66 by S. Lugo, LTJG MC 10381.

SYNOPSIS

1. References report HAVINVSERV interviews of all available personnel known to have any knowledge/involvement in the 15 July 1966 crash causing SUBJECT'S death. None of the individuals contacted were able to provide any substantive information indicative of SUBJECT'S survival/capture by enemy forces. The co-pilot (RICHEY, see infra) of the helicopter was identified although interview was not effected since a current location could not be ascertained; however, information from various sources indicates that CAPT. RICHEY was killed in a car accident. Attempts at identification of next of kin (NOK), were unsuccessful and it is considered likely that CAPT. RICHEY'S parents may have passed away and Mrs. RICHEY has re-married or otherwise utilizes a different surname; further attempts have been discontinued. HAVINVSERV investigation is being closed. Requestor is remnant.

INTERVIEW OF HELICOPTER GUNNER

2. Reference (A) reports the interview of CAPT G.A. LUCUS, USMC, DUSTA: HAHS (Supply) Marine Corps Air Station (MCAS) Yuma, AZ. CAPT (then SGT) LUCUS was interviewed, verified his presence aboard the helicopter and confirmed that the only other survivors were the pilot and co-pilot. CAPT LUCUS was unable to provide any information supportive of SUBJECT'S possible survival in the aircraft/fire.

ATTEMPTED CONTACTS WITH CAPT RICHEY

3. Reference (B) reports identification confirmation for George Gladden RICHEY (DPOB: 05-14-39, Washington, D.C.). CAPT RICHEY (a naval aviator) was released from USMC active duty in 1968.

4. RICHEY'S listed home address was that of his father.

In addition, CAPT RICHEY'S spouse's address was listed as of May 1967.

INTERVIEW OF PILOT
5. Thomas Christopher MCALLISTER, was interviewed at his residence, MCALLISTER confirmed his assignment as the pilot of the helicopter and related no enemy forces were within sight at any time during the incident and noted that it was not possible for SUBJECT to have survived the helicopter crash/ffire. Regarding the co-pilot (LT RICHEY), MCALLISTER advised he had learned (although unable to recall the source), that LT RICHEY had been killed "several years ago in a war accident". (Ref (C) refers).

RE-CONTACT WITH REQUESTER

RE-CONTACT WITH REQUESTER
6. CDR Mable L. WALLIS, USN, Naval Military Personnel Command (NMPC), Retired Personnel Support Section (641E) was contacted regarding CAPT RICHEY. Although unable to provide the source of the information, CDR WALLIS advised that contained within SUBJECT'S NMPC (Code 641E) dossier, notations had been made regarding CAPT RICHEY'S death in an automobile accident in Norfolk, VA in 1970. CDR WALLIS advised that no additional information concerning CAPT RICHEY is contained therein. CDR WALLIS could not determine the writer of the notation and advised that numerous NMPC personnel had worked on SUBJECT'S dossier over a several year period.

INQUIRIES RE CAPT RICHEY

7. Additional inquiries conducted at CAPT RICHIE's home address in Northwest, Washington, D.C., were unsuccessful for any pertinent information. The current occupants of the building had no information regarding former occupants of the residence; moreover, they had never heard of the family name RICHIE. Subsequent inquiries conducted at local U.S. Post Office regarding a forwarding address were unsuccessful since forwarding address records are only maintained for a period of one year.

- B. Review of Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Directory for a listing for the name G.G. RICHIEY surfaced no listing. In addition, utilizing the Haines Criss-Cross Telephone Directory, similar negative results were met re surfacing the name G.G. RICHIEY.

5. 151930 and 151936 were part of a twenty four helicopter strike force. 151930 was the lead aircraft of a Division of four with 151936 flying the number two position. Both aircraft were loaded with four U. S. troops with combat gear. Both aircraft had ample power to take off and the flight to the landing zone proceeded normally. The approach was normal through the final leg. The approach was over a small sloping terrain although the landing zone was level. The pilot of the lead aircraft realized that he was critical and he decided to overshoot the zone unless he initiated a large flare. There was a clearing just beyond a tree line at the far edge of the zone and the leader elected to land long in that spot. He maneuvered his aircraft to that spot, and with maximum power applied and rotor RPM dropping, landed slightly hard. He lowered the ramp and started unloading his troops.

151936, the number two aircraft, was approximately four rotor diameters aft of the leader. He also recognized that the approach was a little high. However, he had been selected when the aircraft rolled in final and the pilot attempted to slow down. He saw the lead aircraft landing long and there appeared to be an area large enough to land just aft and to the left of the leader. The pilot made his approach to that spot and just prior to landing saw several troops on the ground at the intended landing spot. The troops made no attempt to move but the pilot of the way so the pilot moved slightly forward and right. The landing was made, the collective lowered, and the ramp lowered. The troops started unloading. The aircraft was on the ground.

On the ground there was a loud explosion heard by the people on the ground and both aircraft began to shake and vibrate into uncontrollable conditions. Both pilots immediately secured the engines and applied rotor brakes. All hands exited the aircraft, taking with them the machine guns and personal equipment.

An immediate damage assessment was made and the pilots saw that neither aircraft could be flown out, even with new rotor heads and blades. The aft blades of 151936 had struck the top of some eighteen to twenty feet high green bamboo covering the tops from the majority of the stalks in the rotor path.

There was no fire in either aircraft except a residual fire in the number two engine of 151936. The flames were coming out of the intake and were being blown toward some broken oil lines. These flames were extinguished with a CO₂ bottle.

The crews vacated the area and with sporadic sniper fire into the landing zone, moved the machine guns and personal equipment to another aircraft, boarded and returned to Port M.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY
BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20310

IN REPLY REFER TO
BUNED:394:AFZ:1F

18 MAR 1971

Honorable Walter E. Powell
House of Representatives
Washington, D. C. 20515

Dear Mr. Powell:

This is in further response to your recent inquiry in behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Dennis concerning identification of their late son, Petty Officer Third Class Mark "Y" Dennis, U. S. Navy.

The Department of the Army performs the identification and preparation of all deceased service personnel in Vietnam. Information provided by the Army indicates that thirteen remains from the crash site were received at the mortuary on 28 July 1966 and identified, including Petty Officer Dennis' remains. His remains were embalmed on 29 July and prepared for transportation to the United States on 30 July 1966.

Units of the Third Marine Division reported that two Navy and eleven Marine Corps personnel manifested aboard the aircraft were killed when it crashed in the vicinity of Quang Tri Province, RVN. They were also required to perform and confirm field identifications prior to evacuation by Marine Graves Registration personnel to the Army Mortuary. Name associations for each remains was determined by personal recognition and/or location at the time of death.

The Report of Casualty indicated Petty Officer Dennis sustained third degree burns on his entire body. Thus, no fingerprint impressions were obtainable and identification could not be confirmed by this method. Army mortuary documents record that identification of Petty Officer Dennis' remains was made by definitive comparisons of his remains with health record entries, relating, but not limited to, height, weight, and color of hair. This very favorable comparison supported by information received from the activity to which he was assigned indicating his physical location at that time provided ample basis upon which to make the identification. Although Petty Officer Dennis was badly burned, hair follicles in protected body areas, such as the underarms and the perineum were available for comparison purposes.

It should be noted further that simultaneous processing of remains of personnel involved in the accident permitted Army mortuary identification specialists to cross-compare records for each remains against physical characteristics of the remains received, providing further confirmation

A-249

BUNED:394:AFZ:1F

of the identification. In identification of this type, processing remains by cross-comparison is a standard procedure utilized in a "contained incident" to provide the specialists a basis for conclusive confirmation.

To provide as much meaningful information as possible, which may assist in relieving the next of kin's distress, the following is submitted from official records concerning personnel aboard the helicopter at the time of the crash: ten individual remains were positively identified by dental and physical characteristics comparisons; two individual remains were identified by personal recognition, subsequently verified by fingerprint comparisons; one individual remains was identified by physical characteristics comparison. Three personnel survived and were returned to a duty status shortly after the crash.

Identification tags would not necessarily be included in personal effects returned to the next of kin. The tags, if worn by members at time of death, would normally stay with them to destination. However, the presence of the identification tags on remains is considered only as supportive, not conclusive, evidence of identification.

The certificate of death prepared for Petty Officer Dennis was completed by medical personnel at or near the location of death and indicates the cause of death as "completely burned". This cause of death is applicable to eleven out of the thirteen personnel involved. However, comments annotated on the reverse side of his death certificate, it should be noted, were made prior to receiving the remains at the Army Mortuary.

The Navy may make a recommendation concerning viewability of the remains, in consideration of the next of kin's sensibilities and of the circumstances of death. However, upon arrival at the funeral home designated by the next of kin, it is their prerogative to request an inspection be made of the remains, if desired.

The Army's identification of Petty Officer Dennis was accepted by the Navy during July 1966 as valid and conclusive. A review of information submitted by the Army Mortuary and a review of information contained in official death records and health records appears to verify information indicated above regarding individual identification.

This Bureau is in complete sympathy with the Dennis family and understands that it may be most difficult for them to accept the loss of their son. This is especially so when death occurs in a distant location and the circumstances of death deny them the opportunity to view his remains.

This office has been advised by Bureau of Naval Personnel officials that a photograph of LT P. E. Galanti, USN, has already been forwarded to Mr. and Mrs. Dennis. Possibly, this follow-up effort may resolve their doubts when they compare the picture of LT Galanti with the photograph appearing in NewsWeek magazine.

It is hoped that the foregoing information provides the Dennis family with a measure of reassurance to assist in alleviating their doubts and anxieties.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

Subj: Mark V. Dennis, Deceased

Ref: (a) Telegram Dated with Major Robert A. Larsen, who was the Company Commander of Co. H, 2nd Battalion 1st Marines, 1st Marine Div in Vietnam during 1968 and signer of condolence letter provided to the Dennis Family; presently located at Quantico, Va., telephone 156-2736

1. By ref (a) Major Larsen briefly provided information that he was aboard the helicopter which followed Captain McAllister's aircraft and upon the realization that that aircraft had received enemy ground fire, the helicopter on which Major Larsen was a passenger returned to Dong Ha.

2. Major Larsen further advised he did not recall knowing Mark personally or his whereabouts on 15 July. However, a muster was made at Dong Ha prior to the Company's departure by helicopter and again immediately upon their return to Dong Ha. Therefore, occupants of Captain McAllister's aircraft were obviously known by their absence at the re-muster made upon the Company's return. Name associations for passengers in Captain McAllister's aircraft were provided in this manner.

March 16, 1972

Mr. Dennis
5175 Circle
Pineview
Miami, Ohio 45342

Dear Mr. Dennis:

In my letter to you of November 12, 1971, I have given careful consideration to a new and independent review made by the Adjutant General of the Navy of all pertinent data concerning your brother, Mark "W" Dennis. This review was conducted by persons not previously connected with the circumstances and who would have no motive for repeating any prior error which might be found or suspected in connection with the processing of your brother's case.

To be totally candid with you -- as I am confident that my advisers have been with me -- I shall acknowledge at the outset that certain discrepancies of record do exist, and that it does not now appear possible to resolve them in any truly conclusive manner. These discrepancies are:

(1) The statements concerning the helicopter crash on July 15, 1966, the number of persons perishing has been variously stated as twelve and thirteen. Eleven deaths is the number indicated by the current review. The earlier mention of larger numbers of fatalities is believed to have resulted from separate statements and recombinations of crew and passenger death categories.

(2) Mark's medical record is equivocal as to whether his height in February 1966, when he was some 17½ years of age, was 67½ inches or 69½ inches. This figure of course has a bearing on the consistency of the exhumation measurements with the identification of the remains as Mark's. This record ambiguity has been taken into consideration in appraising the exhumation evidence.

(3) It seems certain that no recognizable identification tag for Mark was found in direct association with the body recovered from the helicopter wreckage, or else the body would have been more readily and immediately identifiable. It also seems likely that the identification tags which accompanied the body on its return to Ohio were not found in the heart of the wreckage and had not been burned in intense heat of the type which would be created by the burning of inflammable volatile liquids incident to the crash of a helicopter. There seems now to be no means of establishing the exact manner in which the identification tags were brought into association with the remains during the recovery and encasement process, or of explaining the manner in which they may have been burned to the condition revealed by your tests.

(4) There is no definite explanation for the inclusion of a piece of metal tubing with Mark's remains, and there is no basis for questioning your contention that the tubing did not come from the wrecked helicopter. It does seem quite possible that foreign objects may have been gathered in with the remains in a situation such as this, however; and there does exist a possibility that such an object might have been from a cargo item.

Despite the unresolved discrepancies I have mentioned, however, I am personally convinced beyond any reasonable doubt that Mark was in the helicopter in question when it crashed and burned at 6:15 p.m. on July 15, 1966, and that he did not survive that crash with its ensuing explosion and fire.

Included in the information which persuades me to this effect are data, which we have not previously elaborated upon, as to the nature of Mark's service and of the operations in which he played a significant role prior to his death. His correspondence with his family at the time may well have been inhibited both by modesty and by a proper concern for secrecy, but I can assure you that he was associated with units engaged in successful operations against the enemy from April 11, 1966, up until the moment of his death on July 15th. It is to the credit of all involved that those operations were conducted with relatively light casualties to our units. The operation in the course of which Mark met his death was one which continued for almost one month, in the course of which the entire Battalion with which Mark was associated suffered only eighteen deaths -- of which ten were sustained in the helicopter crash which claimed Mark's life. I am reciting these circumstances to demonstrate the basis for my own conviction that Mark was a team member whose absence was immediately noted and keenly and personally felt by all members of Echo Company, by forty-two fellow corpsmen and two medical officers of the Second Battalion, and by a substantial number of the Marine Corps officers and men of the other Battalion organizations to whom Mark was affectionately and respectfully known as "Doc."

In addition, I feel that it is particularly important to consider the area in which the helicopter crashed and burned after it was struck by enemy fire. It landed within 100 yards of its intended landing point. It was within the perimeter of friendly forces. In fact, it was described by the pilot of the helicopter, who survived the crash, as having "landed amidst a battalion of Marines." It was immediately converged upon by those troops, members of Mark's own battalion and company, who were thwarted in rescue attempts by the fire and explosions aboard the

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY
WASHINGTON

July 24, 1972

Armistead W. Gilliam, Jr., Esquire
Smith and Schnacke
Talbot Tower
Dayton, Ohio 45402

Dear Bill:

Thank you for your letter of June 27 concerning the case of Mark "V" Dennis. Also, I appreciate your good wishes and the report on your activities.

While in no way questioning the judgment previously made, I felt that because of the past history of the case, and the genuine concern and sincere doubt by the family, I must look again at the entire matter and arrive at my own independent conclusion.

I have had the extensive file of documents and correspondence reviewed and have had each point which you raised reinvestigated.

The first question is, of course, whether or not Mark can be placed with certainty aboard that fatal helicopter. To resolve this, Major (then Captain) Robert A. Larsen, United States Marine Corps, Mark's Commanding Officer while he was in Vietnam, was interviewed. From him it was learned that:

-Mark was present at Morning Muster of E Company on July 15, 1966.

-Mark was present when the various platoons of E Company assembled as a group to board the helicopter for the mission. E Company was the only group sent on the mission. It was the only group in the boarding area. The entire company boarded, no one remained behind.

-The first helicopter in the formation carrying the first platoon, Mark's platoon, was hit by enemy fire, crashed and burned within friendly lines. Major Larsen was with the second platoon in the second helicopter. He witnessed the crash and decided that the landing would be too hazardous. The remainder of the company did not land, but returned instead to Dong Ha Airfield. Immediately upon landing, the platoon was mustered on the field helicopter. While the emergency escape hatch was jettisoned prior to the crash, no one aboard the helicopter left it prior to the time it touched the ground. In view of these facts, it must be considered impossible for your brother to have survived the crash and the fire and to have been subsequently captured by the enemy.

Due to the very nature of the circumstances under which they were recovered, I cannot assert with the same degree of conviction that the total content of the shipment of remains sent to the family consisted of the remains of Mark's body or of items personally associated with him at the time of his death. A preponderance of the available evidence satisfies me, though, that those remains have in gross been correctly identified with Mark. In reaching this conclusion, I am aware of and have considered the various data which might point toward other conclusions, such as some of the height estimates based on bone measurements. I am told that few experts in this field will urge the infallibility of any of the formulas that were used as they might be applied to a particular individual, as distinguished from their general statistical validity.

The presence of lead in the remains could well be explainable through the presence, in cargo carried by the helicopter, of gasoline containing tetraethyl lead which was used to power engines on electrical generators supplying power for field communications equipment in operations of this sort. Grenade pins and shrapnel may likewise have been found with the remains as a result of grenades being carried by Marines aboard the helicopter. It can now be neither proved nor disproved conclusively that such gasoline or grenades were aboard the particular helicopter which crashed -- but each was an item whose presence aboard the helicopter would have been entirely consistent with the conduct of an operation of the sort in which the force was engaged.

Dental X-rays of Mark "V" Dennis are now included in his Navy medical record, and they can be made available for examination by any person you may designate. The quantity of dental remains recovered in conjunction with this particular body was insufficient to permit positive identification by that means alone. Those which were recovered, however, correspond in every detail with available data on Mark's dental work with the exception of a filling in one tooth -- and that filling is indicated by other naval dental records to have been placed after the X-rays were taken.

The extinguishment of a revived hope, such as you and your family have entertained, is as unpleasant a duty and as disconcerting an experience as bearing or receiving ill tidings in the first instance. This communication to you must regrettably be of that nature. It conveys my personal convictions based on a careful review of all of the known facts. I ask that you and the other members of Mark's family accept my assurance that your distress is shared both by me and by the members of my staff who have assisted me in this unpleasant task.

Sincerely yours,

John H. Chafee

to determine the missing members. It was then that Mark and the other nine crash victims from the first platoon were reported absent.

-The only survivors from the crash were three air crewmen not assigned to E Company. All others aboard perished in the crash and fire.

Based on this evidence I can, unfortunately, only conclude that beyond any reasonable doubt Mark was aboard the helicopter and died in the crash.

The second question is whether the body returned to the family is Mark's. Here again, all of the circumstances and the reported ambiguities were reinvestigated without prejudice. I see no reason to doubt that this body is in fact that of Mark Dennis. I draw this conclusion from the following facts:

-Major Larsen stated that there were no personnel with E Company who would not be on the roster list such as Vietnamese scouts, reporters, observers, etc.

-Marine Corps Headquarters has stated that no personnel were determined to be missing in action from the entire Second Battalion, E Company's parent command, during the 27 days of Operation Hastings.

-There are no discrepancies between the physical characteristics of the body identified as Mark's and those physical characteristics recorded in Mark's file.

- Favorable dental comparison
- Same approximate build
- Same approximate age
- Same blood type
- Same race
- Same sex
- Same approximate height--I say this after the matter was discussed with Dr. J. Lawrence Angel, the expert anthropologist from the Smithsonian who examined the bone structure. Dr. Angel emphasized the extreme difficulty in getting a precise measurement from the fractured bones, but put the height between 67 and 69 inches. He further stated that the bones indicate the victim had stopped growing. Therefore, it seems to me that even assuming that Mark was 69 inches upon enlistment, as seems likely, there is a close approximation between the measurement and the known height of Mark Dennis.

-These characteristics were minutely compared with all the statistical data collected on the other crash victims to determine if there was a possible correlation. No such correlation was found; they fit only Mark Dennis. Mark Dennis does not correlate with the statistical data of any other victim.

-The analysis of the dog tags done by Papucci Laboratories reports that organic material (residue) on the surface of the metal was not completely consumed, and that the tags were therefore not subjected to more than 200 degrees. The source of that heat (match or burned paper) is mere conjecture. There is no analysis of the metal itself to determine its exposure, just the residue (smudge) on the surface. Mr. Maurice Williams, Director of the FBI Laboratory states that in a situation such as this, metallic dog tags could have been in the victim's pack or ripped off during the crash and insulated by other debris, partially burned or thrown clear. Mr. Williams, who has extensive experience in crash victim identification, has had cases where a body was burned beyond all recognition, but a portion of the hand with a ring was relatively untouched. I do not know the history of these dog tags, but the very fact that they show some degree of exposure to fire links them to the circumstances of the accident. I cannot assume that there was an attempt to deceive and there is a logical explanation for the analytical findings of Papucci Laboratory.

-The Papucci Laboratory analysis of the fragment of bone chip taken from the victim reports an "above normal" amount of lead, specifically, 42 parts per million. It does not give a reference base for normal. Mr. A. Stalman's book, Progress in Chemical Technology, (Academic Press, 1969, page 165), the reference used by the FBI Laboratory, states that normal lead levels in bone are between .67 and 3.59 mg per hundred grams; or up to 36 parts per million. We are talking then about a very minute quantity indeed, 6 parts per million. The FBI Laboratory could not make such an accurate measurement of this small sample, but assuming that Papucci Laboratory could, there are any number of sources of lead in a helicopter: storage batteries, paint, varnishes, ceramics, coloring agents, and ammunition, to name a few. Surface contact could occur from any of these sources. This presence of lead does not establish that the body was burned by gasoline. In fact, when tetraethyl gasoline is burned, the lead combines with bromide ethylene to form lead bromide. Since Papucci Laboratory did an elemental analysis only, the presence of this compound was not certified.

-The presence of grenade fragments supports rather than contradicts the contention that the body was aboard a helicopter which crashed and exploded while carrying combat loaded Marines. Had there been no such fragments, it would be more difficult to assume that the individual had been trapped in a closely confined compartment with exploding ammunition and grenades.

Finally, the casualty section of Marine Corps Headquarters reports that there are cases where as many as ten victims of a single air accident, who were so mutilated and unidentifiable as to require common burial, were declared dead based on the knowledge that those personnel were aboard the aircraft. In other aircraft cases an individual is declared dead where no body is recovered but there is no possibility of his escape. A witnessed crash at sea is an example.

I share with the Dennis family their grief over the loss of a son and brother, and I deeply regret that I cannot hold out to them the hope that Mark is alive and being held as a prisoner of war. That conclusion does not comport with the known facts of the case.

Sincerely yours,

John W. Warner

Gentlemen:

The following are our results on a Metallic Piece Object, removed from left maxillary sinus-- 7/9 /71, and submitted for testing and evaluation, July 13, 1971.

CHEMICAL COMPOSITION:

Si	0.051
S	0.015
P	0.030
Mn	0.53
C	0.21
Cr	0.034
Ni	0.06
Mo	0.037
V	0.005

MECHANICAL ANALYSIS:

Rockwell Hardness, "D" Scale ----- 9F

Half of the submitted sample was chemically and mechanically test. The Composition and Hardness correspond basically to a Medium Carbon Steel, SAE 1020. Under Microscopic Examination the submitted Sample was identified as part of a grenade pin. The Normal Grenade Body is typically a High Fragmentation Steel, with a Hardness Average of Rockwell "C" 35, and a possible Chemical Composition of an SAE of from 1040 to 1080 Steel. The piece involved is not a fragment, but rather a part of the Grenade Exploding Unit. It is difficult to understand how a grenade fragment was exploded on an above ground surface Helicopter.

Gentlemen:

The following are our results on a Sample of Partially corroded aluminum tubing, taken from casks and submitted for testing and evaluation, July 13, 1971.

CHEMICAL COMPOSITION:

Mn ----- 1.1h
Cu ----- 0.12
Fe ----- 0.62
Si ----- 0.29
Zn ----- 0.04
Cr ----- 0.00h
Mg ----- 0.02
Sn ----- 0.00h
Ni ----- 0.03
Pb ----- None
Bi ----- 0.0002

The above Chemical Composition corresponds basically to Alloy 3003. This type of alloy is classified as having a relatively high corrosion resistance.

The Scale residue, partially metallic was checked for Chlorides and Alkalies, to determine in part the possible cause of partial deterioration and oxidation of the Metal.

Heavy traces of Chlorides were found on the surface of the Metal, a possible conclusion of Salt Water attack. No Traces of Alkalies were found. Chloroform or other bodily preservatives containing Chlorides could also have initiated a corrosion factor on the Aluminum Metal. This Section of Tubing could not have deteriorated as such for at least 10 years, unless some accelerants as enumerated above were in contact or present with the metal.

Gentlemen:

The following are our results on a "Dog Tag" Identification, partially charred, submitted for testing July 13, 1971.

SCOPE OF TESTING:

The residual washed material from the surface of the Tags, was treated and analyzed according to Normal Laboratory Procedure and ASTM Methods for Infrared Identification. (Reference Region of the Electromagnetic Spectrum, including wave lengths from 0.76 micron to approximately 300 microns.) The basic identification made, using the above procedure is similar to fingerprint identification. Each Solvent, straight chain or aliphatic ring, aromatic or cyclic, mixture, solvent waxes etc. has a typical ignition residue which can be identified and in so doing, relate the residue to the original solvent.

RESULTS:

No volatile solvent found on Tag. Partial surface ignition occurred a residual ignition of possible non volatile material. The surface of the Tag revealed a low temperature coefficient and indicates that the Tag was not sustained in a temperature medium over 200°F.

CONCLUSIONS:

The surface of the Tag could have been prepared merely by igniting match with some Cellulose (Paper) present to indicate a surface action of the material.

The following are our Certified results on a Composite Skull Bone Structure with Preservation Material submitted for testing and evaluation, August 10, 1971.

SCOPE OF TESTING:

To determine by analytical and infra-red procedure the presence and type of any possible volatile solvent, or solvent mixture utilized in the ignition of the charred fragments.

PROCEDURE FOR TESTING:

The residual treated surface exposed material was treated and analyzed according to Standard Laboratory Procedure and A.S.T.M. Methods for Infra-red identification. (Reference Region of the Electromagnetic Spectrum, including wave lengths from 0.7 to approximately 300 microns). The basic identification made, using the above infra-red procedure is similar to fingerprint identification. Each solvent, straight chain or aliphatic, ring, aromatic or cyclic mixture, solvent type, etc. has a typical ignition reaction which can be identified and in no doing relate to residue to the original solvent.

RESULTS:

The composite sample on the infra-red absorption did not prove conclusive to identify the possible initiating solvent or mixture. Quantitative Colorimetric Determination of the prepared treated sample revealed the presence of Lead, 42 Parts per million.

CONCLUSIONS:

No conclusive factors were evaluated from the Infra-red Analysis, primarily due to calcium absorption of any organic fuel and excessive amount of preservative which in part contained formaldehyde.

Colorimetric Determination of the residual treated material reveals a sufficient quantity of Lead in our opinion residual derived material from the ignition of Gasoline. The amount found is too great for normal cumulative surface deposit.

The lead content on the surface of the bone had to come from

from the Tetra Ethyl Lead Content found in Gasoline at the time of incident.

The following addenda based on submitted material, July 13, 1971, can be ascertained to be correct, based on the original results and evaluation.

1. Paper residuals (cellulose) of a prepared packaging type, containing a waxed surface to prevent moisture absorption, was identified from the composition and low sulfur content. Sulfur as SO₂ in P.P.M. 0.8
Wax Coating of surface (one side) in oz/Square ft. 0.005 (Average)*

CONCLUSIONS:

This type of packaging material is usually used to cover or wrap ammunition or other goods which must not absorb moisture.

*The average calculated quantity based on the relative wt. of the wax coating per square foot of surface was arrived at taking the submitted small fragment of submitted paper and calculated on the same basis at the amount found on surface. The limit of error in our opinion is not greater than 15%.

The following addenda, based on Reports, dated July 16, 1971 and August 16, 1971, correlates our findings and evaluation on the preservative used to sustain or prevent immediate deterioration of the body of Mr. Jerry Dennis's brother who served in the Armed Forces, (Navy) as Petty Officer Mark V. Dennis.

1. The preservative was of a prepared Formaldehyde Composition, using inert matter to coat the surface of the body.
2. Traces of chlorides found at the initial stages of testing and other impurities could not have acted on the body or coffin containing the body in the state that our Laboratory tested the submitted samples.

CONCLUSIONS:

In our opinion, based on the test results, the Chemical Preservative was not responsible for the state of the body, immediate tested surroundings or parts of the sealed coffin which retained the above named Petty Officer.

To whom it may concern:

This statement is to confirm that it is my belief that Mark V. Dennis was at least 5'11" to 6 ft. tall when we last saw each other in 1966. As Mark and I were engaged to be married, I rode with he and his mother to Camp Lejeune, N.C. He was a Navy medic corpsman being assigned to the Marines to go to Vietnam and had to report for training there. I recall being 5'7½" to 5'8" tall myself then. At the time, when I dressed up, such as to go to church, I wore what were called "spiked heels" which were 2½" to 3" high. I still had to look upward to look into Mark's eyes. Today I was measured at 5'7½" tall.
